Letter to the Editor:

Source of Capitalist Profit

Karl Marx defined labour-power as "the aggregate of those mental and physical capabilities existing in a human being, which he exercises whenever he produces a use-value of any description," Labour is the use of these capabilities in the production of usable goods,

The values of commodities are determined by the "socially necessary labour-time" required for their production. And the labour-time socially necessary "is that required to produce an article under normal conditions of production, and with the average degree of skill and intensity prevalent at the time" — that is, it is the time taken by labour equipped with tools and machinery of average technical efficiency and whose productiveness is due to the use of the given stage of the industrial arts.

Now, the value of the labour-power for which the capitalist pays, like the value of any commedity he buys, is measured by the labour-time socially necessary for its production. And is equal to the labour-time required for the production of the subsistence for the labourer and his family.

Now, the value of the labour-power for which the capitalist pays, like the value of any commodity he buys, is measured by the labour-time socially necessary for its production. And is equal to the labour-time required for the production of the subsistence for the labourer and his family.

But the labour-time necessary to produce the means of a labourer's subsistence (for a day, say) is loss than the labour-time which the labourer can and does deliver to the capitalist in that time. The result is that in any stated of the wage which the capitalist pays him for the labourpower he uses up. This difference Marx called "unpaid labour" and "surplus-value." This materialized constitutes the

The value of all the non-labour factors (the raw materials and supplies, and the plant and equipment used up in production) is included in the total value of the final product. To that extent they add to its value.

The Increasing Severity of the Cyclical Crisis

Lettor to the Editor:

Expropriato Capitalists

The capitalist class is mainly responsible for the oconomic depressions, racism, and wars of the twentieth—century; and, in addition, their wealth is mainly due to exploitation and inheritance. Therefore, they have neither a moral right to rule over the future destiny of mankind nor to expensive and control of their vast corporate wealth.

And consequently, industry should be nationalized, the capitalists personal possessions divided among the poor, and the political and economic supremacy of the working class established.

Notes: I. Soviets or popular assemblies (councils of workers', soldiers', and farm workers' deputies) are the instrument for attaining the forementioned ends. 2. In 1952 the average American worker received 3.44 hrs. per 8 hrs. delivered which means his wage would have to be multiplied by 2.33 to abolish exploitation.

the envelope was stamped with a six cent Franklin D. Roosevelt U. S. postage stamp. On the back of the envelope appeared the return address, "GEORGE F. KENNAN 67 Nassau Road, Princeton, New Jersey, 08540." The address and the return address on the envelope are handwritten in what appeared to be blue ink or blue ball-point pen.

The letter, dated August 8, 1970, was hand-written on a blue lined, yellow sheet of 8 1/2" by 11" paper with a line of small round perforations on the left edge, indicating that it might have been torn from a spiral notebook. The blue writing in the letter appeared to have been made by the same type instrument used in addressing the envelope.

The first two paragraphs of the letter appear to be highly scurrilous and obscene, referring to _____, his wife, and "_____," who is described in the letter as _____ daughter.

The last paragraph states, "I've placed you on my list of those who are to face a Communist firing squad."

The letter is signed "Red Hitler." In the lower left-hand corner appears a crude drawing of a skull and in the lower right-hand corner is a drawing of a swastika. emblem.

GEORGE FROST KENNAN

George Frost Kennan appears to be identical with the Ken in the material furnished byas "Architect of 'C Policy.' - Placed his adherents strategically in State and CIA. to influence policy through meetings in Washington and Princeton (100-42)

Background

Kennan was born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on February 16, 1904. He was graduated from Princeton University with an A. B. degree in 1925. Kennan entered the United States Consular Service in 1925, and later served in numerous American consulates and embassies throughout the world. In 1952 Kennan was named United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union. In October, 1952, Kennan was declared persona non grata by the Soviet Government and his recall was requested. Kennan retired from the State Department in July, 1953, and is currently associated with the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, New Jersey. (Who's Who in America 1956-57; 62-81548-20, NR II-2*53)

Unfavorable Information

The Daily Worker, 5-2-56, east coast daily communist newspaper, page 2, stated that in a speech reportedly delivered on April 30, 1956, Kennan called for leadership which would "dispell the fears and misunderstandings that cause so many Americans to applaud the shocking miscarriage of justice and fairness in the Congressional investigations and loyalty hearings. We need a leadership that is much less afraid of men like Jenner and McCarthy. What was happening in Washington in the heyday of McCarthy still burns in my memory."

James Reston, New York Times correspondent, in an article appearing in the May 7, 1956, issue of that paper, stated that according to George Kennan, former Ambassador to Russia, much of the difficulty of the United States came from fixed attitudes towards other countries, attitudes which were wrong and antithetical to long-term United States interests. Kennan believes, according to Reston, that the United States while recognizing its differences with the Russians should look upon recent changes in Soviet policy with the hope that future relationships can be established. Kennan reportedly feels that the United States should accept the satellite situation. Kennan reportedly feels that United States-China relations are less promising because of the way China has insulted us, but that the United States should not try to obstruct Red China's admission into the United Nations if a majority of that group wants to admit Red China.

The Director made the following notation regarding the above article: "I am amazed at the way Kennan has fallen for the Soviet line. H."
(82-31543-25)

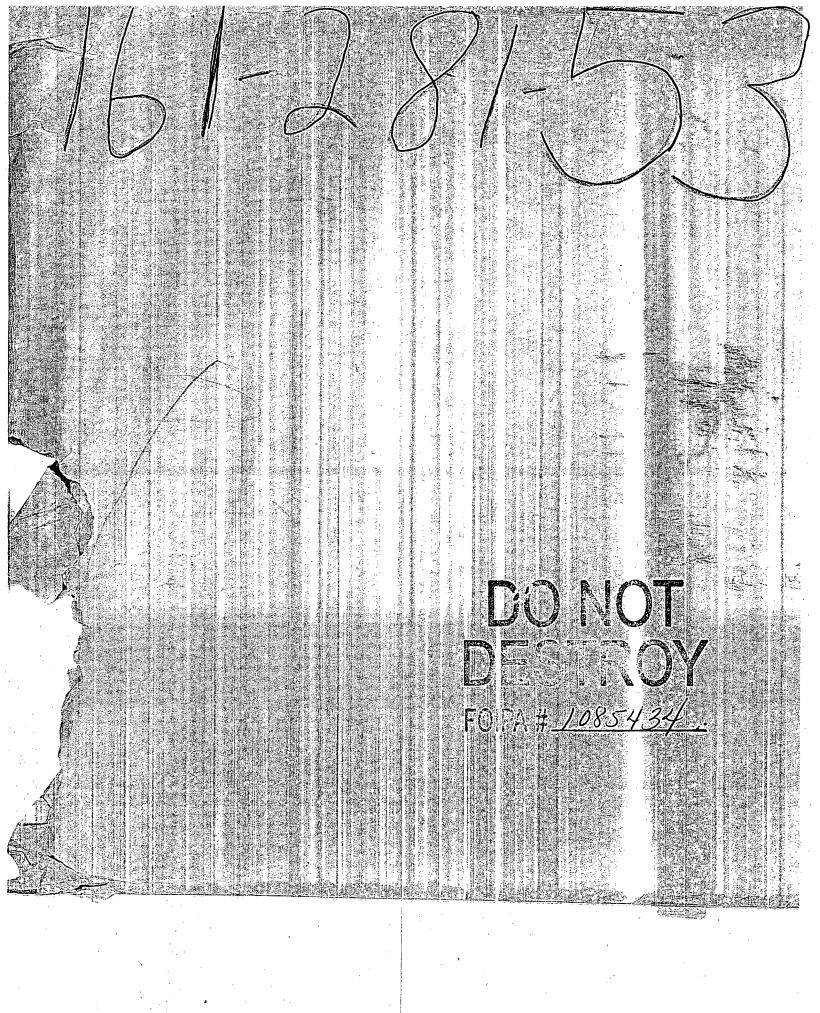

Other Information

In an article in the April, 1951, issue of the Foreign Affairs and in a speech before the Pennsylvania State Bar Association in January, 1955, Kennan stated that United States policy should be one of firmness and "containment" of Russian expansion. Kennan stated that he was opposed to the aggressive policy of John Foster Dulles.

(62-81548-10, 22; 52-81548-A Washington News Service 1-18-58)

Kennan has generally maintained cordial relations with the Bureau and furnished helpful and pertinent material while he was with the State Department. (62-81548-10)

No investigation made of Kennan.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Federal Bureau of Investigation United States Department of Instice 510 South Spring Street, Room 900 Los Angeles, 13, California July 22, 1946 CONFIDENTIAL Director, FBI GEORGE KENNAN Information Concerning Dear Sir: CONF. INFT. b7D has called the attention of the Los Angeles Bureau Office to a letter, the substance of which was given to informant to ascertain whether or not KENNAN had a record of any un-American activity. had some record of a party by this name and the party is believed to be identical with GEORGE KENNAN. The letter which was given to Informant is as follows: "July 3rd, 1946 "Mr. Louis J. Canepa, President, DECLARATETED BY SP4 BJAJOFW Jonathan Club. 315 W. 9th St., Los Angeles. My dear Mr. Canepa: 1410933 "In accordance with Miss REMINGER's telephone conversation, I wish to transmit further details regarding the availability of Mr. GEORGE KENNAN for a speaking engagement with the Jonathan Club, on August 8th or 9th. "It is our understanding you would be interested in arranging an off the record meeting for a group of not more than fifty persons, at which Mr. KENNAN would give a brief informal talk to be followed by a question and discussion period. "As you will note by the enclosed biographical sketch, Mr. KENNAN has had wide experience in the field of the Soviet Union and is therefore eminently qualified to discuss this subject. I might add he is regarded as one of the most able and brilliant officers in the career service. "According to present plans he will be in Los Angeles August 8th or 9th. As his plans materialize, they may bring him to Los Angeles a day or so earlier. In the event that both of the above mentioned dates prove enconvenient for you, it may be possible to change to August 7th. Please let us know if there is any further information regarding Mr. KENNAN you might find helpful. We will of course be interested in whatever plans you might develop. Re: GEORGE KENNAN
Information Concerning

Informant furnished the Los Angeles Bureau Office the following information about a Mr. KENNAN, who is believed to be the party mentioned in the letter:

"PEOPLE'S WORLD", March 13, 1945, page 2, column 3: "U.S. EDITORS MEET IN MOSCOW - MOSCOW, March 12 (UP) - SALOMON A. LOZOVSKY, vice commissar of Foreign Affairs, toasted Allied armies and press today at a round table discussion between Soviet editors and press freedom delegation of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

"The four-hour conference was held at the residence of W. AVERITE HARRIMAN, U.S. Ambassador to Russia: The ASNE delegation consists of Dean CARL ACKERMAN of Columbia University, WILBUR FORREST of the New York Herald Tribune, and RALPH McGILL of the Atlanta Constitution.

"Others present at the conference, which centered on mutual news policy and problems, were GEORGE KENNAN, American charge d'affaires; ELLERIDGE DURBROW, chief of the U.S. State Department, southeastern section, and JOSEPH PHILLIPS, chief of OWI in Moscow.

"Those representing the Soviet press included the manager of Tass News Agency and Moscow editors of Pravda, Izvestia, Red Star, Trud, Komsomalskaya Pravda."

"PEOPLE'S WORLD", December 6, 1944, page 2, column 5: "HONORS FOR DE GAULLE (by the World Foreign Department) - Honors, at a formal reception in Spiridonovka Palace in Moscom vers given President CHARLES DE GAULLE of the French Provisional Government by Foreign Commissar MOLOTOV of the soviet of the first day, yesterday.

"Practically everybody was there, drinking toasts to France and Russia, the victory in the war and the security of the peace. Prominent were the American Charge d'Affairs, GEORGE F. KENNAN, the British Minister JOHN BALFOUR, and STEFAN JEDRACHOWSKI, diplomatic agent of the Polish Committee of National Liberation, which maintains a de facto government of Poland at Lublin. Naturally, there was no representative of the Polish Government in Exile in London. All French speaking people in Moscow attended."

Informant also furnished the Los Angeles Bureau Office the following information concerning a Lieutenant KENNAN, executive officer of the U.S.N.R. However, it is not believed that this individual is identical with the GEORGE KENNAN mentioned in the letter set—out above, as it appears that Lieutenant KENNAN, as of January 26, 1943 was an "Executive officer of the U.S.N.R.", where I was a supplication of the U.S.N.R.", where I was a supplication of the most able and in the letter as one of the most able and in a principle of the United States Embassy in Moscow as of December 6, 1944 and March 13, 1945. The following is the information furnished concerning Lieutenant KENNAN:

July 22, 1946 Director Re: GEORGE KENNAN Information Concerning YOUNG COMMUNIST LEAGUE "WEEKLY REVIEW", 35 East 12th Street, NYC, Jan. 26, 1943, page 9: Article "VOLUMES OF LOVE ... BOOKS FOR OUR FIGHTING BOYS" by ALBERTA WEBER, is followed with excerpts from a speech made by Lieut. KENNAN, executive officer of the U.S.N.R., at the recent Institute on Books in Wartime held by the University of Minnesota, in which it makes "a little sampling of what some of the Navy lads are reading and why". This well written article concludes "with the belief that they represent (men in the armed forces) a cross section of the American public, and that their reading habits are akin to those of the civilians with almost mathematical certainty. All of us are seeking earnestly to know more and to understand better this changing, challenging world in which we fight to live." This information is being brought to the Bureau's attention in order that some check may be made to ascertain the real position and standing of this individual, Mr. GEORGE KENNAN, and in order that the Bureau may advise the Los Angeles Field Office if it is the desire of the Bureau that this meeting he covered to ascertain the nature of the lecture which will be given by Mr. KENNAN on or about August 8th or 9th, 1946. GEORGE FROST KENNAN INFORMATION CONCERNING

Reference is made to your letter dated July 22, 1946, entitled, "George Kennan, Information Concerning," in which you advised that an individual by the name of George Kennan was to address the Jonathan Club in Los Angeles on the subject of the Soviet Union. From referenced letter it was indicated that Kennan was recommended by the State Department as a person eminently qualified to discuss the subject and would probably be in Los Angeles on August 8 or 9.

For your information, George Frost Kennan has held many positions in the foreign service of the State Department and numerous references to him at foreign posts are contained in the Bureau's files. One of his recent assignments was that of Charge d'Affaires of the American Embassy in Moscow. Confidentially, Kennan is considered a foremost authority on Russian affairs and his recent assignment to Moscow furnished considerable basis for our present foreign policy.

INFORMATION CONCERNING

Dear Sir:

Reference is made to my letter to the Bureau dated July 22. 191 entitled "GEORGE KENNAN, Information Concerning." I wish to advise that the informant had a misspelling of the name and it should be as captioned in this letter.

As a member of the Jonathan Club in Los Angeles, I received an invitation dated August 2, 1946 to attend a luncheon on August 8, 1946, which was to be addressed by Mr. GEORGE KENNON of the Public Liaison Divison of the Department of State. The invitation described him as recently returning from Moscow where he served as Minister-Counselor of the Embassy and Charge d'Affaires after Mr. HARRIMAN's departure. He states that he went to Moscow as third secretary in 1933; that in 1935 he served in Prague. Berlin and Lisbon. He then returned to Moscow in 1944 as Counselor of the Embassy. This meeting was sponsored by the Army-Navy Club of the Jonathan Club. In view of other commitments which I had, I assigned Assistant Special Agent in Charge JAMES C. ELLSWORTH and Special Agent JAMES G. FINDLAY of this office to attend this luncheon.

A surprise guest at the luncheon was Ambassador EDWIN FAULEY. Mr. PAULEY introduced Mr. KENNON, describing him as being the most able career man that he had met in the State Department. He said he worked with Mr. KENNON during his assignment to Moscow.

Mr. KENNON opened his remarks by stating that upon his return to the United States this year he was requested by the Department to appear before various groups in the east and then was assigned to come to the west coast to talk to select groups off the record and yet in such a manner as to let these groups know what the problem actually is with Russia. He also said that he had two appearances scheduled in two midwestern cities. which he did not name. The theme of his talk appeared to be the United States policy towards Russia. He said that it was absolutely necessary to know the Russian people in order to understand their way of doing business. He pointed to the history of Russia and to the fact that for hundreds of years she has been surrounded by peoples who were very difficult to deal with and that the Russian people naturally developed the tendency to bargain for everything. He said they are much like an American businessman in that a businessman will take all that he can get without taking too many risks. The Russians do not really expect to get everything they ask for but they continue to drive a hard bargain, hoping to get as much as they possibly can. They also use very rough tactics with no holds barred. They say nasty things during a period of bargaining but yet when it is all over they smile and respect their rivals who have stood up to them and shown real strength; however, they have no respect whatever for any signs of weakness. He said that in the bargaining process it did not matter what kind of remarks were made against an individual or the government official involved as long as no reflections were cast on the Soviet Union; that the Russian public considered their republic as sacred and will not stand for reflections being made against it. However, they forget any remarks made during a bargaining process against an individual representative.

Re: GEORGE KENNON

Mr. KENNON said that he personally does not believe in making concessions to the Russians. He said that their tactics have to be used in dealing with them. For example, they will stand on a border and exert pressure against you for months and years until you finally decide to concede five hundred miles of territory to them, hoping that they will be satisfied; however, they are never satisfied and immediately you will find them on the new border pressing you.

Mr. KENNON added that no Soviet official dares to give away something for nothing. He is expected by his government to drive a hard bargain for everything. If he can show his government that he has got any advantage in the bargain, he is considered successful. To illustrate the difficulty of dealing with the Russians, Mr. KENNON cited the example early in the war of one of our ships colliding with another ship in the North Sea and being able to stay afloat only by means of continually using her pumps. She finally reached Murmansk and tried to get into a dry dock for repairs; however, the Russians would do nothing about giving her a dock. There were requests after requests made and nothing was done. The ship continually ran her pumps to stay afloat, ran out of fuel and food but still nothing would be done. After about three months, a foreign officer telephoned Mr. KENNON that they had five hundred seamen in Vladivostok ready to leave for the United States to take over a number of barges and small craft which we were giving to Russia. However, each of these men did not have a visa and could not leave. The foreign officer wanted an exception to the rule made and a group visa granted so these men could all leave and pick up the boats, otherwise they would all have to travel five thousand miles, requiring ten days on the train, back to Moscow to individually get a visa. Mr. KENNON said that here was his opportunity to bargain so for several days he put off the foreign officer on the grounds that it is unusual procedure and difficult to do. After several days he mentioned in an aside that it was difficult to grant this request in view of the attitude of the Russians toward the ship at Murmansk. The next day the foreign officer said that he was sure that he could do something about the ship at Murmansk if something could be done about the visa for the crew; whereupon, Mr. KENNON said that he was sure if something could be done about the ship he could arrange for the visa. This settled the problem. He said that this is typical of the problems confronting American officials in Russia in attempting to get something done.

Mr. KENNON said that the government in Washington is now working out a policy and program which should prove helpful in future dealings with Russia. He felt that all dealings should be based on the following points:

- 1. We must recognize the Russian people as they are, as being different from the rest of us and not as if they were like Americans. They must be handled according to their peculiarities and background.
- 2. We must maintain sufficient force to be able to back up what we say. He said he did not mean merely armed forces but also economic forces and psychological forces.
 - a. As a corollary to number two, we must be willing to use that force when it is needed and let Russia knowthat we intend to use it.
 - b. However, in maintaining this force, we must try not to close the door to future dealings but try to leave an opening which will not be harmful to America but which will permit the Russians to continue peaceful negotiations without losing face.

Elaborating on 2-b above, he stated that the Russian officials are arrogant and very difficult to deal with. He indicated that the Communist Party in Russia is absolutely dominent of the government. On the other hand, he has found that the average Russian national has respect for America. He said that he was in Russia from 1931 to 1933 and then from 1935 to 1937 and then after seven years he went back in 1944. During this seven year lapse of time he noticed a very decided change in the general attitude of the Russian people. He said in the first two tours of duty he noted an absolute observance to the Communist Party. The people appeared to be reconciled to it and the young people grew up indoctrinated with it and there seemed to be some enthusiasm for the party's work. In 1944, he noticed a lack of enthusiasm. As an example, he said that on V-E Day when Russia announced the defeat of Germany a crowd of two thousand people assembled outside the American Embassy in Moscow and for ten hours stayed and cheered America. Whenever an American was signited by them they raised him to their shoulders, passed him along over the heads of various groups, indicating their enthusiastic feeling towards Americans. A party agitator was sent to break up the meeting. He tried to get the people to give three cheers for America and dispurse but each time he mounted a wall he was pushed off and they were unable to break up the crowd.

Re: GEORGE KENNON

He said that now when the call goes out for a demonstration of two hundred fifty thousand people with flags in the Red Square, two hundred fifty thousand people show up with their flags, march and do as they are told but one gets the feeling that there is no spirit back of it. On the other hand, if the old Russian church, which is barely hanging on, lets it be known through gossip that there will be a meeting, throngs of people crowd into and around the church, their faces lighted up and an obvious desire present to have this organ function.

Following his talk, he permitted questions to be asked and for approximately one hour he answered any questions that came to him from the floor. It is interesting to note that approximately two hundred fifty of the city's leading business and government officials as well as high ranking Army and Navy officers were present.

One of the questions asked was what had become of MARSHALL ZHUKOV. He stated that an Army officer in Russia has no political status and that the Soviet Regime has seen to it that these leaders of the Army have been relegated to outlying cities and posts where they can exert no important influence on political matters.

Re: GEORGE KENNON
INFORMATION CONCERNING

He was asked whether he thought there would ever be a free exchange of information by the Soviet press and the American press. He said that there is some slight trend in that direction although the press in Russia is completely dominated by the government. He said that the State Department had gotten together a magazine giving factual information about America and had been permitted to disseminate twenty thousand of these magazines in Russia. However, they had originally been sent to the government and he was disappointed to note that very few of them were in the hands of the people that he ever had contact with. He said he had asked officials in some of the cities in Eastern Russia where he visited if they had seen the magazine and they had not. The Embassy then took the liberty of mailing directly to officials copies of these magazines and he knew that these were extensibely read.

He was asked about the Commintern. He said that Russia did a very smart thing in "decentralizing" the Commintern. He said that for years democratic governments had questioned the Russian government as to why she permitted an organization to exist in her territory which advocated the overthrow of other governments. Finally during the early part of the war it became very embarrassing to the Russian government to have her allies asking these questions and so she decided to do away with three words in the question, namely "in her territory." He said that Russia thereupon decentralized the Commintern and it functioned from Paris, Mexico City, Yenan, etc. He said there is no doubt in his mind that the Commintern simply went underground as it is too obvious when policy laid down in Moscow appears in the parties in these foreign countries within twenty-four to forty-eight hours after the policy is made.

He was asked whether he thought branches of the Commintern or Communist parties in other countries voluntarily followed the party line from Moscow. He said that he did not know but undoubtedly much of it was voluntary and that Moscow was undoubtedly glad to have the parties come "to heel" without any pressure being applied.

He was asked whether the Soviet government recognized or supported the Communist Party in the United States. In answer he said that the State Department used to ask officials in Moscow why they supported and encouraged the Communist Party in the United States. The reply always was, "Have we ever complained when any country took action against any Communist Party? If you have no way of eliminating objectionable parties in your country, do not come crying to us."

He was asked whether there was anything to the charges appearing in the press occasionally that the British and American governments are ganging up on Russia. He said there is nothing to these charges. He said that it is quite natural that with the common background that they have, the British and American governments are working toward a common goal and issue similar instructions. He said that in the Embassy in Moscow frequently it would happen that the British minister and the American minister would receive similar instructions as to what they should tell the Soviet government and in order to avoid charges that the British and Americans were conspiring against them, they would work out a deal that either one or the other would handle the matter, or otherwise arrange it so Russia could take no offense.

He was asked as to what the attitude of the returning Russian serviceman is. He said that he feels that eventually these men may cause a new policy to come about in flussia with respect to other nations. He said that these men have seen things in other countries that no propaganda can take away from them. He feels that the russian government knows this. He said that any member of the armed forces, who is a party member, is placed in a school called a reindoctrination school but which in reality is a decontamination school for a period of three months as they know that a party member will exert much more influence than a common citizen. A common soldier is given one month in this school. After the soldier leaves this school he is watched and if he is observed to be a leader in his community and is not a party member he is immediately invited to join the party which he cannot very well turn down. He said these veterans are not exactly like American veterans in that they do not immediately speak their minds. He has the impression that the Russian veterans will gradually work their way up in the Communist Farty in Russia until they hold key positions which will enable them to purge the party and bring about a change in policy.

He was asked by one businessman whether it would be wise to accept a large order from the Russian government for merchandise on a ten day credit basis. He said that he would not hesitate to accept such an order. He said that Russia has been very meticulous in maintaining her credit with businessmen. He said that he would not want, however, to give the impression that Russia would always be honest financially. He said there is no private business in Russia and everything is done by the government and the government knows that it can only go bankrupt once. He feels that if Russia could get billions and billions of dollars in loans from other countries she might decide that it would be to her advantage to decline to repay and her bargaining instincts might cause her to renounce such a large indebtedness.

Mr. KENNON said that at the present time there are six million members of the Communist Party in Russia and there are eleven to twelve million in the young Communist movement. He said that during the war Russia lost approximately twenty million young men and that their labor situation is very bad at the presenttime. He said that if it had not been for the women, who are strong physically and willing, during the war Russia could never have carried out her commitments as they had done the work of the men. He said that Russia is in a very weak position at the present time. He said that her main difficulty in trying to wage another war would be transportation as she has no system of roads and he doubts that an automobile could travel from Leningrad, a city of three million people, to Moscow, a city of seven million people, a distance of about four hundred miles. He said that to his knowledge there are only five paved highways of any great length in the entire Soviet Union. He said that he traveled two days on the train into West Siberia and in the entire time, looking out of the train, saw only two automobiles. As to compulsory labor camps, he said that he doubted some reports that there were as many as ten million persons under compulsory labor in Mussia at present but that he would not be surprised if there were one to five million persons.

In conclusion Mr. KENNON stated that he feels that the United States policy must be to first decide what is best for the United States and then to vigorously pursue the policies, backing them up with a show of force if necessary. He said that he has now been assigned to the National Mar College as Director of Foreign Political Training. He said the college is made up of one hundred men each year, ten to come from the State Department and inety from the four armed services. He said it is the hope of the government now to have unified thinking on the part of the government agencies in respect to its foreign policy in order to advance more forcefully in foreign countries during a war or during a period of occupation.

SOVIET ACTIVITIES
GEORGE P. Kennan, Department of State with the INTERNAL SECURITY - R

Original cannot be located and is not on record. Then original is received in Files Division it will be and either with this copy of may be given a new social

On the afternoon of October 16, 1946, Mr. George F. Rennan of the Department of State, presently a lecturer of the American Embassy in Moscow, Mussia, who is considered the foremost State Department authority on the Soviet Union, discussed with me and with other representatives of the Security Division for approximately one and one-half hours various phases of present Soviet operations and related matters.

For your information and for record purposes there is set out below a summary of the remarks made by Sr. Kennan at this time concerning the Soviet Union and related problems.

that the economy, as well as the political structure of the Soviet mion, at the present time is somewhat strained as a result of the last war although the Stalin regime is still firmly entrenched in power and there is no immediate prospect of any organized effective opposition to that regime. Obviously in a completely totalitarian police state such as the Soviet union of man stated, no effective revolt from below is possible except under negotian scale conditions, each as chaos following a lost war or armed outside intervention.

INDEX The personnel of the rel Army which has returned from other sections of Europe, according to Er. Hemen, has become highly cynical and completely disillationed as a result of their contact with Western European civilization and relative economic plenty. However, in view of segregation, incarceration, and forced imalgration to other parts of the Soviet Union than their original homes Red Army personnel is being closely expervised and is anable to offer any effective opposition. At the present time in the Coviet Union, economic conditions and particularly agricultural conditions, are otrained. Konnan stated that considerable cynicism has resulted from the failure of the Soviet regime to prodade any of the much needed consumer goods so glibly promised the Soviet people during Sorld War II. Particularly acute is the present situation in Soviet agriculture where, according to Kennan, the collectivaration program has obviously failed. Reman expressed the opinion that the Soviet leaders will experience considerable difficulty in extricating themselves from the collectivazation dilemma and that the recent parge among agricultural and collective farm leaders which has been announced in the Soviet press is indoubtedly a by-product of this perioditural failure. Kennan stated that the Soviet people, particularly since the war, appear to clearly realize that instead of producing the consumer goods so necessary to their welfare, the entire Soviet economy is mobilized for war production and they seem to realize also that they are being intensely-propagandized by the Soviet leaders. According to Kennan this propaganda is generally disbelieved

Memo to the Director

Remnan pointed out that whereas in the early years of the Soviet regime the appeals of the All Union Communist Party (Bolshevik) were met with considerable emotional reaction among the people, at the present time the reactions of the Soviet people to Party ideological clickes and Party instructions are purely formal and without any emotional impetus whatever. Reman illustrates this by stating that if the Party leaders call a demonstration for ten thousand people at a particular point in Moscow, the ten thousand people will show up and will applaud at the proper points in view of their fear of the EKVD apparatus but the demonstrations obviously lack any emotional depth or vigor and the attendance of the people is forced and involuntary.

In contrast, according to Kennan, if one of the few churches still permitted to operate, lets it be known by word of mouth that there will be a church festival or meeting thousands of people frequently pack the area surrounding the church obviously emotionally stirred by the appeal of the church.

Reman stated that he is firmly convinced that at the present time top leaders of the Soviet Union do not desire a war with the West, and particularly with the United States, in view of the ravages of World War II, their present economic and morele situation, and particularly their doubts as to the present successful conclusion of any such war. Hennan stated, however, that despite this the Soviet leaders will by nature continue to press on every point for the maximum objectives up to the actual breaking point with the rest of the mations and will not back down in their aggressions unless met at the point of aggression by superior military and political force. This type of tactics, Kennan stated, undoubtedly will continue but he expressed the opinion that the Soviet Union, when the breaking point is reached, will, at least for the present, backtrack rather than face the possibility of a third world war. Kennan also expressed the opinion that a war between the Soviet Union and the Western powers is not necessarily inevitable and can be avoided if relations with the Soviet Union are handled intelligently and with the requisite firmness.

Seman pointed out that at the present time the Soviet Union is as completely a controlled police state as it ever has been and that the maximum supervision is exercised over all Soviet citizens and forcigners by the twin ministers of police and security, the MVD (The Soviet Ministry of Internal Affairs, formerly the MEVD) and the MVD (The Soviet Ministry of State Security, formerly the MEVD) and advised that little is known by the average Soviet citizen concerning the operations of these ministries although the very mention of their names is sufficient to arouse fear. He pointed out that both ministries are apparently controlled still by Lavrenti Pavlevich Beria, former titular head of the MEVD and a member of the Politbureau, and Georgi Maximilianovich Salenkov, a Party secretary of the All Union Communist Mirty (Bolshevik) and also a powerful member of the Politbureau. Kruglov and Merkulov, the present ministers respectively of Internal Affairs and State Security, appear, according to Kennan, to be completely subservient to Beria and Malenkov, who by virtue of their close association and appearance are often called in Moscow "the Fwin Emmuchs." Further information concerning the powerful political position of Falenkov and Beria is set out below in connection with the Politbureau. With regard to the organization of the actual leaders of the Soviet Union, Kennan stated that at the present time, as for the past several years, the Soviet Union has been ruled under the direction of Joseph/Stalin by the Polithureau of the Executive Committee of the All Union Communist Party (Bolshevik), the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. Keman Pointed out that the Comminist Party of the Soviet Union, as well as other Commist Parties, have frequently been referred to as a conspiracy within a conspiracy and expressed the opinion that the same situation presently exists in the Politbureau. He stated that while it is difficult to evaluate the real influence and power of the members of the Politburess, out of the fifteen odd members five or six appear to make the elemental decisions and to have fuller knowledge and greater authority than the other members. Among this small, extremely powerful Politheress group Kennen mentioned particularly Malenkov and Beria, referred to above, and Vyacheslav Kolotov, the present Soviet Foreign Minister. He stated that there men under Stalin appear particularly powerful and appear to control cany of the policies in the Soviet Union. Kennan stated that particularly powerful were Malankov and Beria because of their control of the MVD and the MUB. Kennan mentioned that it had been rusored also but not confirmed that some months ago Beria was given by Stalin the task of heading a special atom bomb project in the Soviet Union, which allegation has been made before but never reliably confirmed. Of particular interest in connection with Kennan's statements regarding Beria and Ealenkov was the fact that he expressed the opinion that of the two Malenkov probably is the leader and the more powerful intellect and personality. In this connection it is interesting to note that Kalenkov has generally been considered junior to Beria not only in age but in actual power. Kennan's opinion, however, would seem to controvert this.

lico to the Director

with regard to kelepkov you will recall from the Corby Case that Igor Sergelevitch Gisenko advised, in September, 1945, that Georgi Kaximilianovich Malenkov was directly under Joseph Stalin the coordinator of all Soviet intelligence operations and that it was Malenkov who decided jurisdictional disputes concerning allocation and utilisation of personnel and other disputes between the various intelligence agencies of the Soviet Union, including the Intelligence Department of the General Staff of the Red Army, the MBB (formerly the MKGB) and the political section of the All Union Communist Party (Belshevik). This position as intelligence coordinator in the Soviet Union, in view of the known stress placed by the Soviet Covernment on intelligence, would obviously be one of considerable power and importance. With regard to the functions of the Politbureau and ito operations, Kennan stated that it was his understanding, as a result of his experience in the Soviet Union, that during discussions of the Polithureau while verious points of view were being expressed Stalin usually walked up and down the room smoking and making no comment until at some particular point in the discussion he made up his mind and signified the final decision by pointing his pipe to which ever one of the Folithereau members he agreed with and saying "He is right." Kennan stated he understood that these decisions of Stalin, reached in this manner at meetings of the Politbureau, would then be accepted as final and that one of the primary sources of strength of the Politbireau was its unity on such questions, inasmuch as after Stalin's decision was made all members of the Folitbureau, even those who had most bitterly opposed the policy decided upon thenceforth supported the policy as if it were their own. Hennan was asked, in this connection, for his opinion as to what might happen in the event of Stalin's death when there would be no Stalin present to make the final decision among the arguing Polithureau numbers and was asked specifically whether in his opinion the death of Stalin might precipitate any serious internal crisis in the Soviet Union. Kemman stated that while, of course, any enswer to this question was pure speculation it appeared probable that the death of Stalin will not cause any immediate chaos or collepse and that the Polithereas would be able to take over in the immediate period following Stalin's death but that subsequently there might develop a bitter fight for power among the various factions of the Polithercan, which might possibly strain the Soviet hierarchy badly. Much of the answer, according to Kennan, might depend upon whether or not the ultimate death of Stalin is anticipated for any length of time and what might be done upon asticipation of his death by Stalin to appoint and solidify the position of a successor of his choice. Kennan stated, as is obviously true, that the deciding factor to the question of who will rele the Soviet Union after Stalin's death depends necessarily upon who secures and paintains control of the Ministry of State Scourity (MOB) and the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MVD), inasmich as the intelligence and military apparatus of these Einistries is the most powerful single force in the Soviet Union. You will recall in this connection that the troups of the MVD reportedly number at least half a million and, according to Kennan, these troops are probably the only completely armed units which could immediately be mobilised within the Soviet Union and furnish the geards for all important buildings and functionaries, including the Kremlin and the members of the Politbureau themselves. The power consequently weilded by whoever controls these ministries is almost without limit inasmuch as the MMB and MVD control weapons, communications, transport, vital installations, and the physical apparatus of the government. In view of this, according to Kennau, the successorship of Stalin might well go to Malenkov and Beria or to one of them, although the possibility exists that kolotov might be able to capture the Party machinery, as such, before Malenkov and Beria. If Kennan's opinion is correct it would appear then that in the event of Stelin's death, unless conditions in the meantime have changed, that Halenkov would be the most logical successor in so far as it can now be determined.

Reman, was specifically asked concerning the present influence and power of Andrety Indanov and Andrei A. Andreyev, who, together with Halenkov, are Party secretaries and compose the societariat of the All Union Communist Party (Bolshovik). Kennan stated that the position of Andreyev, and particularly Indanov, appears somewhat anomalous at the present time. It will be recalled in this connection that the source of Stalin's power for many years was originally his position as general secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and that some years ago when he gave up this position he was replaced by the three-man secretariat. Kennan stated in this connection that it appeared that Stalin, in recent years, had attempted to play down the importance and power of the secretariat in order to cut down the danger of new, popular competition for power from that source and consequently Andreyev and Indanov apparently do not at the present time have as much power as they have had in the past, and particularly they are not as noverful as Malenkov. Beria and Molotov. With regard to Zhdanov particularly. Kennan stated that his position appeared particularly difficult to evaluate, among other reasons because of his past extreme prominence and his connection since 1934 with the Leningrad Soviet and the Leningrad Party Organisation of the Communist Farty of the Soviet Union. In this connection it should be recalled that the Leningrad Party Organization has always occupied a somewhat: unique position in the All Union Communist Party (Bolshevik). The October Revolution of 1917 was actually in its initial stages the revolution of and was lead by the Leningrad Communist fraction, which was composed to a large extent of skilled workers from the Leningrad tool and related industries. The Leningrad Farty Organization, as a result of this early background, has, according to Kennan, considered that it occupied a somewhat unique position. Certain disaffection occurred in the Leningrad Party Organization when the capital of the Soviet Union was moved to Moscow and when the Moscow Party Organization began to assume greater and greater importance.

For several years after the Revolution of October, 1917, and during the period of a certain disaffection in the Jeningrad Party Organization, the Leningrad Party Organization was headed by zinoviev, one of the most important leaders of the revolution who, because of his opposition to Stalin, was exiled to Eastern Russia some years later and was eventually purged. Several years before 1934, according to Renman, Zinoviev was replaced as head of the Leningrad Party Organization under Stalin's order by Sergei Rirov, who at that time was considered Stalin's closest associate and most probable successor. It will be recalled, of course, that the assassination of Rirov in 1934 at Leningrad was apparently the event which was immediately responsible for the institution of the purges in the Soviet Union from 1934 to 1935, during which millions of Soviet citisens, including thousands of Party officials, were executed or placed in concentration camps. According to Rennan, sometime after the death of Sergei Kirov, Andrei Ehdanov, who was then considered one of Stalin's closest subordinates and who had frequently been mentioned as Stalin's probable successor, was on Stalin's order made head of the Leningrad Party Organization.

During the war Andrei Endanov wielded almost unlimited power on the Leningrad front and, according to Kennan, was the man most responsible for the Soviet defense of Leningrad which he directed. However, Kennan stated, a recent tendency to play down Endanov's importance has been noted. One incident which occurred approximately one year ago, according to Kennan, amounted to almost a direct slap to Endanov. In this connection, Kennan advised, about a year ago at an elaborate three-day celebration, the city of Leningrad was given the Order of Lenin for the defense of the Leningrad area and the city in 1941 and 1942. Although Endanov, as noted above, was the person primarily responsible for directing the defense of Leningrad he was not present at the ceremony and his name was not even mentioned in connection therewith, constituting, according to Kennan, a deliberate insult to his prestige and power. Kennan stated that in his opinion this incident is part and parcel of an attempt on Stalin's part to keep Zhdanov from becoming too powerful a figure, although there is little question but what Zhdanov continues to wield great influence.

In connection with these inner Politbureau rivalries and in connection with the consolidation of Stalin's absolute power through the purges, Kennan pointed out that whatever else may be said about Joseph Stalin it cannot be denied that he is a politician of the highest stature with the greatest possible ability at intrigue and at so playing off opposing forces against each other that his power in the past several years has never been seriously questioned. Kennan also pointed out that it is practically an immutable rule in the Soviet Union that great and constant public credit can only go to "the great leader and wise teacher, Comrade Stalin" and that incidents such as the ignoring of Zhdanov in connection with the award of the Order of Lenin to the city of Leningrad are commonly used to cut down the prestige of any possible competing figure in the Soviet heirarchy. Kennan expressed the opinion that no other member of the Politbureau is possessed of Stalin's same broad ability to handle the leading figures in the Soviet Union and that probably any successor to Stalin would have more trouble in consolidating and maintaining absolute power.

With regard to the purges, Kennan stated that beginning in 1934 and terminating in 1938, a series of purges were instituted under Stalin's order by the NKVD in the Soviet Union, resulting in slaughter or incarceration in concentration camps, not only of millions of Soviet citizens but of thousands of the top leaders of the Party and State. The first of these purges was set off as a result of the assassination of Sergei Kirov referred to above. In connection with this assassination, Kennan stated that he understood that the Leningrad NKVD was aware of the plot to assassinate Kirov but withheld its hand from affirmative action in an effort to develop the case and to pull off a tremendous coup in connection therewith. However, opportunity for the assassination occurred and Kirov was assassinated before the Leningrad NKVD Organization could prevent the assassination. As a result of this and immediately after the Kirov assassination, Stalin personally went to Leningrad where he himself interrogated the assassin and personally ordered the immediate execution of sixteen NKVD officials in the Leningrad area.

There was at this time, according to Kennan, in addition to the rivalry between the Leningrad Party Organization and the Moscow Party Organization, considerable rivalry between the Leningrad and Moscow NKVD Organizations which, plus the desire of the Leningrad NKVD Organization to build up its prestige, may have contributed, at least partially, to their failure to prevent the Kirov assassination. The execution of Kirov's assassin and the sixteen NKVD men was only the beginning and during the following four years a series of purges, several of which culminated in Moscow Show Trials, were effectuated by the NKVD.

It will be recalled in this connection the tremendous Soviet publicity that attended the various Moscow Show Trials, including the case of the Anti-Soviet

McDo to the Director

Trotekyite Centre and the case of the Anti-Soviet Bloc of Rights and Trotekyites. The purges culminated in the military purge before and after the secret trial in Moscow before the Military Collegian of the Supreme Court of the USSR in 1938 of the top marshale and generals of the Red Army, including Earshal Mikhail Tikhachevsky, the then brilliant chief of staff of the Red Army, who was responsible perhaps more than any other single person for the technical and organizational strides made by the Asd Army in the 1930s. The military purge trial was, of course, given no publicity. Reman pointed out, as has been well known, that the show case trials in connection with the purges which resulted in the execution of most of the defendants charged represented only an infiniteeinal portion of the actual number of officials purged. Through the show trials and the attendant unannounced purges, practically every old Bolshevik who still retained power and prestige and who was not completely subservient to the will and whims of Joseph Stalin was eliginated and as a result of the purges thousands of old Party members were obliterated. Since 1938 the percentage of members of the All Union Communist Party(Bolshevik) who participated in the revolutions of 1905 and 1917 has been relatively small.

It is interesting to note in this connection that at the Party Congress of the All Union Communiat Party (Bolshevik) in 1938, after the purges, Joseph Stalin publicly admitted before the Party Plenum that the Party in 1938 contained several hundred thousand loss members than it had four years before, a tacit admission of the extent of the butchery of the Party through the purges, which amounted to, according to some estimates, between 20 and 33 and 1/3 per cent of the Party membership. It is amusing also to note that Stalin's statement in this connection amounting to the admission of the blood toll of the purges in the Party, was not at every passe for breath by manisous shouts of "Hurrah for Comrade Stalin!"

The purges from 1934 to 1936 comptituted a series of related executions wherein at least three sets of officials in the Soviet Union were parged. In other words the first purge of officials was followed by a second purge in which the Party and MAVD officials responsible for the first purge were themselves purged, which in turn was followed by the purging of the officials responsible for the second purging, it being interesting to note that among others two successive heads of the MAVD were directly or indirectly purged in this manner. Throughout this series of related purges, wherein the purging officials were themselves successively purged, the primary motive was to completely consolidate and insure the personal power of Joseph Stalin and every successive official brought up from the ranks to take the place of a parged official was selected on the primary basis of blind after loyalty to Stalin. The men who now make up the Politbureau as mentioned above and are under Stalin's thumb, the rulers of the USER, are the men who, according to Kennan, survived the successful purges of the 1930s.

Home to the Director

In this connection Kennan pointed out that particularly Georgi Maximilianovich Malenkov and Lavrenti Pavlovich Beria fall in this category and Kennan hazarded the opinion that worse than anything else Stalin would probably hate to have to replace Malenkov and Beria at the present time, inasmuch as their loyalty to him appears to have been demonstrated and inasmuch as undoubtedly they have so administered the Ministries of Police and Security that no other major figures of proven loyalty to Stalin and of equal ability are presently discernable in the lower ranks of the MVD and MOB. It will be recalled in this connection that it is Mennan's opinion that Kruglov and Merkulov, respectively tituler ministers of the Ministries of Internal Affairs and State Security at the present time, are merely stooges for Malenkov and Beria, who actually control both Ministries, and it is Mennan's opinion further that Malenkov and Beria or one of them would be the most probable to succeed Stalin in the event of his death in the immediate future.

With regard to foreign Communist Parties, i.e. Communist Parties outside the Soviet Union, and the direct or indirect control of the operations and policies of those parties by the Polithureau of the All Union Communist. Party (Bolshevik), as well as with regard to the alleged dissolution but possible present existence of the Comintern, Kennan made the following comments. In Moscow visiting foreign Communists are presently as closely supervised as other foreigners and the average Party member and official in the Soviet Union, according to Hennan, holds foreign Communists in atter and complete contempt, feeling that they have already foreworn one loyalty and one allegiance and are not consequently to be depended on or to be trusted to the fullest extent. This statement by Kennan obviously would not be meant by him to apply to the hard inner core of foreign Communists engaged in conspiratorial work, whose loyalty has been frequently demonstrated and who have consistently been depended upon by the Soviet Union. In this connection Kennan specifically mentioned the importance of and the trust placed in such figures as Georgi Teritroff, present head of the Bulgarian Communist Party and for many years secretary general of the Executive Committee of the Communist International.

Reman continued that while the officials of the Polithureau of the All Union Communist Party (Bolshevik) are perfectly willing to utilize foreign Communist Parties, most of the nembers of those parties are held in the greatest personal contempt for their "treason". In connection with foreign Communist Parties further, Kennan expressed the opinion, which he admitted was difficult to verify, that in almost every country there exists by reason of minority problems, biological trends, and other reasons an almost irreducible percentage of potential traitors who are prome to affiliate with one or another foreign political and ideological coverent, their adherence to which amounts actually to treason to their country. Kennan pointed out that this percentage of potential traitors in most countries, particularly in continental Europe, with the exception of France and Czechoslovakia, appears to run in the neighborhood of ten percent as a fairly consistent figure, varying from perhaps seven to fifteen per cent, depending upon the particular area and the particular existent conditions involved.

Hemo to the Director

In this connection Mennan expressed the opinion that a substantial number of, what he termed, this consistent percentage of potential traitors were susceptible to Mational Socialist penetration during the years from 1934 to 1944, and many of them, according to him, while they were affiliated with National Socialism during World War XI, have now gone over to the Communist movements of their respective countries.

With regard to France and Grechoslovakia, which he listed as exceptions to the fairly consistent ten percent, Kennan made the following comments. In France the French themselves so bitterly hate other Frenchmen that they are willing to call in the devil himself for political purposes if it can effectively embarrass opposing French political factions. This plus the history of political dissension in France and the results of the German occupation, during which the Communists were able to effectively infiltrate to a great extent into the underground movement, have resulted, according to Kennan, in the transmously high percentage of Frenchmen now espousing the Communist cause in France, it being recalled in this connection that the French Communist Farty is presently the most powerful political party in France. Kennan did put forward the unsupported opinion, however, that if it came to a clear irrevocable choice, the majority of the French would seen "sluff off" French Communism.

With regard to Esechoslovakie, which Kennan listed as the second exception among European countries to his rule of thumb that there is a fairly consistent percentage of potential traitors, he stated that first Crechoslovakia has always been strongly orientated towards Aussia because of the impact of pan-Slavion and other factors, and that in addition, even before the war the Communists were extremely effective in infiltrating themselves into the group surrounding Edward Bonco. In addition, during the war the Czech resistance povement was most effectively infiltrated by the Czech Communists. Even before the war Konnan pointed out the Czech Azbassador to Moscow was no more and no less than a Soviet tool end perhaps an instrumentality of the NKVA. The Ambassador referred to by Kennan in this connection is undoubtedly Fierlinger who is now the Czech Foreign Minister. According to Kennan, although Fierlinger is not an edultted Communist, as Crech Foreign Minister he makes an effective Soviet tool. It will be recalled, of course, also that the Czech Covernment, at the present time as a result of the above factors and as a result of the occupation of Czechoslovakia by the Red Army is almost completely Communist controlled, the Cacch Fremier, at the present time, Element Cottwold, being the head of the Czech Communist Party.

Reman stated that the Communists had been very effective in almost all European countries where resistance movements were active in infiltrating these movements and in utilizing the cells thereof for Communist political and propaganda purposes. This was tree even in the Scandinavian countries such as Korway and Denzark, where the stable constitutional monarchies have, since the cessation of hostilities, provided a rallying point effectively used against the Communist Forties of these countries.

Memo to the Director

Consequently Communist influence in these countries is not as strong as it was during the days of the illegal resistance movement, although it is still material and much greater than before World War II.

With regard to the dissolution of the Comintern and the possible present Soviet control of all Communist Parties on an international basis, Kennan stated that in his opinion the alleged dissolution of the Communist International in 1943 was not actually a dissolution at all but a decentralization and at the present time various secretariats have been set up outside the Soviet Union for the control of Communist Parties within a given area. In this connection he expressed the opinion that Jacques Duclos probably heads a secretariat in France controlling the Western Communist Parties and that Georgi Demitroff, referred to above, undoubtedly controls under the Politbureau the policies of the Communist Parties of the Balkans. Kennan pointed out in this connection that it would be relatively simple in a controlled country like Bulgaris for Georgi Demitroff to be flown frequently to Moscow to report to and receive instructions from the Politbureau and that such visits would be extremely difficult to detect. Kennan also pointed out the possibility which has been considered for some time by the Bureau, that with regard, at least, to the Party line of the various Communist Parties, no central Bureau issuing daily instructions is presently necessary. Most of the important Communist Parties in Europe are now under the control of old trusted Stalinists who have been Bolsheviks for years and who have considerable ability and sense of political analysis (for example Wilhelm Pieck in Germany; Georgi Demitroff in Bulgaria; Klemept Gottwald in Czechoslovakia; Palmiro Togliatti (Ercoli) in Italy; and Jacques Duclos, Maurice Thorez and Andre Party in France.) Kennan pointed out in this connection that almost any of these old Communist leaders could effectively direct the Party line by listening to Moscow radio and by assiduously reading Pravdan "Isvestia", the Wolshevik", and other official organs of Party and State in the Soviet Union.

The use of open code on Moscow radio broadcasts in connection with the determination of broad policies and propaganda lines is, of course, also at least a possibility. In connection with Kennan's remarks regarding the possible present international control of all Communist Parties by the Politbureau through various open or concealed channels, it should be noted that probably such international control is presently under the direct jurisdiction of Georgi Maximilianovich Malenkov, identified by Igor Sergeievitch Guzenko as the head of the Political Section of the All Union Communist Party (Bolshevik), which section, according to Guzenko, has replaced at least in part the apparatus of the old Comintern and is responsible for liaison with foreign Communist Parties and the direction of policy and operations of foreign Communist Parties.

With regard to the present system of police control in the Soviet Union and the controls placed on foreign diplomats, Kennan stated that since the beginning of the purges of the 1930s, police controls in the Soviet Union have been more widespread and more brutal and strict than previously. These controls Memo to the Director have not been relaxed since the end of World War II but in some instances have been extended, one of these instances, as noted above, being the control of returning Red Army personnel who are apparently considered politically unreliable because of their contact with Western European civilization and their understanding of the economic differences between the Soviet Union and the West. In this connection Kennan stated that Red Army personnel who were prisoners of war in almost no instances have been permitted to return to their homes in the Soviet Union but have either been resettled in other parts of the Soviet Union or have been placed at forced labor, a policy which has seriously prejudiced the morale of the Red Army but which the Red Army, in view of the strict MVD and MGB controls, is unable to prevent.

Foreign diplomats, including American representatives - perhaps particularly, are subjected to the strictest controls and their contacts with the Russians are extremely limited. With the exception of official contacts with the highest Soviet officials these contacts are limited, according to Kennan, to a mere handful of individuals in Moscow who are well educated, charming, and excellent company but who are undoubtedly employed by the MGB and who in their contacts with the diplomats walk a continuous tight rope between the fear of execution and the demands of their employers. The only other contacts permitted, according to Kennan are with the bevy of amateur or professional prostitutes provided and supplied by the MGB and controlled completely by that organization.

During the early years of the operation of the American Embassy in Moscow, after the recognition of the Soviet Union in 1933, Kennan stated that one of the few Russians who did attend Embassy functions, with the exception of Litvinov and certain other official personnel who attended as a formal matter, was a Baron Steiger, a carry over from the old czarist regime and a man of considerable personal charm and ability. Kennan stated that he and other Embassy personnel found considerable difficulty in evaluating Steiger's position and the reasons why he alone was permitted such apparent freedom of contact with diplomatic personnel in Moscow and finally came to the conclusion that Steiger was employed by the NKVD (now MGB) to keep watch, probably on Litvinov who was never completely trusted by the Soviet hierarchy.

During the 1930s, when Joseph E. Davies became Ambassador to the Soviet Union, he desired to have members of the Politbureau who had never previously attended an American diplomatic function, attend a dinner or luncheon he wanted to give. At Davies' request, although he felt it was hopeless in view of previous refusals, Kenman approached Steiger and asked if he thought certain Politbureau members would attend a function at Davies' personal invitation. Steiger said it could be arranged and that they would attend. Subsequently Kenman attempted to arrange for the attendance of the Politbureau members through the chief of protocol of the Commissariat of Foreign Affairs who initially refused to even tender the invitation to the Politbureau members, pointing out to Kenman that Politbureau members never attended such functions, and refused in the past, and it would only be embarrassing to everyone concerned to have an invitation tendered and again refused. Kennan, at this point, stated he told the chief of protocol that he had reason to believe that the Politherean members would attend and when asked why he so believed he stated Steiger had so advised him. Subsequently several nechers of the Polithurens did attend this function, but Kemman stated that shortly thereafter, the next time he saw Steiger. Steiger was completely ferious and mentioned to him he understood he had mentioned his. Steiger's, name to the chief of protocol. Shortly thereafter, according to Kennan, Steiger was caught in the net of one of the purges and shot. Kennan stated he had since then felt rather badly at mentioning Steiger's name, although he did not feel that his mention of the name was at all the reason why he was perged, inseruch as Stelfer was a protego of Yan kidse, a Georgian then secretary of the Supreme Soviet and an important figure the was himself shot as a result of the surge. In this connection it should be noted that almost invariably during the various purges, when an important figure was shot, almost without exception his proteges, immediate subordinates, and senstines superiors were also shot, with the exception, of course, of the reliable individual responsible for the perging or the deminciation which lead to the purging and execution. Kennan did state, however, that he thought it entirely possible that his mention of Steiger's name to the chief of protocol of the Commissariat of Foreign Affairs gave Steiger's energies another club with which to belabor him.

Econom stated that the constant four in which all Soviet leaders live in view of the possibility that they may be executed at any time and the network of controls, demunciations, counter-demunciations, and police syying to thick they are subjected is absolutely inconceivable. Hencen stated that any prominent figure in the Soviet Union has powerful encades and that it is not even necessary for Stalin to deliberately order a purge, all that is necessary is for him to indicate that a particular functionary or personage is out of favor and attacks by his enumies will not result in the purge of his enemies themselves.

Kennan SECURITY MATTER - R As of possible interest to the Bureau there are attached & copies of a letter prepared by Mr. George F. Kennan. former United Stated Minister Counsellor at the Embassy in Moscow, now Deputy for Foreign Affairs at the National War College. This letter was written by Mr. Kennan to an official of the State Department outlining his experiences he had during the time he made a number of off-the-record talks throughout the country concerning communism and Russian activities. George As can be noted from the attached letter the comments made by Mr. Kennan exemplify to a certain extent the feelings of the American people in the localities in which he spoke. Of particular interest is the comments he makes on his lectures in California. It is suggested that this memorandum be referred to the Internal Security Section for its information. SUBJECT: Program of Off-The-Record Talks

The attached report by George Kennan contains his observations on a tour of off-the-record talks on .US-USSR relations in the middle and far West. Mr. Kennan's concluding recommendation is: "... I think this sort of work should be continued; and I think the Department should be careful to get people who are thoroughly familiar with their subjects...and who can talk well enough to hold the attention of large groups of people. There is undoubtedly a crying need for a greater degree of contact between the Department and circles all over the country interested in foreign affairs: and the possibilities for constructive effort along this line are enormous."

Excerpts from comments which have come to us directly are also attached.

This type of contact between Department and public is one of the most effective and promising ways of educating the public in foreign affairs and instilling "greater confidence in the sincerity and soundness of the State Department", as Mr. Kenran puts it.

Returning Chiefs of Mission, Foreign Service officers and special attaches can make a very belpful contribution to this program and at the same time get a good look at the country as Mr. Kennan did. Department officers should also bear in mind the possibility of promoting the Department's interests in this respect, if only for a single informal talk in connection with a trip that has to be made for other reasons.

Information of real value can be conveyed to the most influential sections of the public through off-the-record meetings with select groups of business and professional leaders. These meetings are always arranged in consultation with the appropriate policy desk, and precautions are taken to avoid causing political repercussions.

PA is also interested in receiving reports like Mr. Kennan's. First-hand observations of this kind give valuable insight into the public's attitudes on foreign policy and needs for information.

Copy of a Letter from Mr. Ceorge F. Kenhan, Formerly Minister Counsellor at Tmbassy Woscow, Now Deputy for Foreign Affairs at the National War College.

Dear Mr. Russell:

I undertook to let you have a report on my recent tour. Here it is.

Enclosed with this letter is first of all a statement of the various engagements which I fulfilled. I included only engagements where I had to hold the floor, talking simultaneously to all those present. I did not include many other meetings with smaller groups which were of a more informal character. You will note that in addition to the engagements out west I have included one, namely with the Adams County Bankers' Association, which I voluntarily undertock just after my return to my home there. I undertock it because the people concerned were my neighbors; but the occasion turned out to be little different in character than those which had been arranged at the points in the west, and I think that the Department should have record of it.

I am also enclosing certain other papers which I think may be of interest to you, if you do not already have them; namely, the list of those present at the Portland meeting; a letter recently received from Brewster; the program notice for the meeting at Stanford; the list of those present at the Stanford meeting; the list of those present at the Berkeley meeting; and a letter which I have just received from the head of the Adams County Bankers' Association. I also enclose as of possible interest to you, although it has nothing to do directly with my trip, a progress report of the Exploratory Committee for an Inter-Organization Council on World Affairs in San Francisco, dated July 30.

Now as to my impressions:

I consider the trip to have been generally successful, insofar as I believe that I was able to impart to many of the people to whom I spoke, (1) a calmer, more realistic, less extreme and less alarmist view of Soviet-American relations than they had taken or had been exposed to before, and (2) a greater confidence in the sincerity and soundness of the State Department. The trip had its ups and downs, and some audiences were easier than others to influence; but in general I think the project was useful and I believe you will find that view shared by the people who organized the meetings.

In endeavoring to classify the audiences by their reactions, I find myself struck from the start by the fact that the most successful talks were those addressed to stag gatherings of businessmen. These groups proved - I think without exception - to be receptive and appreciative audiences.

On the other hand, the hardest sledding I encountered was with precisely those groups which devote most attention to foreign affairs, namely, the academic circles and the groups organized for the specific purpose of studying and discussing international events. (An exception to this statement was the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, the members of which seemed to me to be a more enlightened and cosmopolitan lot than those elsewhere.)

Now how is this to be explained?

My own analysis is as follows:

- (a) It is generally easier, for me at any rate, to enlist the interest and initiative of stag audiences than of mixed audiences on a serious political topic. That explains in part why the stag meetings were generally more successful than the others.
- (b) Business is, in this country, the profession which has first claim on intelligence, talent, and ability. The business men with whom I spoke (they were, almost without exception, prominent and successful ones), seemed to me to be generally superior in clarity of thought, in realism of judgment, in knowledge of human nature, and in understanding for the assentials of political conflict than the persons in other categories. This rendered them better able to understand the complexities of the Russian approach to international affairs.

- (c) The businessmen approached the question with open minds. They were not committed in advance to any given set of ideas about it. Their personal pride or prestige was not engaged in any particular slant on the Bussian question. For that reason they were friendly, curious, and generally anxious to be enlightened.
- The women's clubs and organizations devoted to the study of international problems have a large percentage of members for whom "foreign affairs" are apparently a form of escape from the boredom, frustration and faintly guilty conscience which seem to afflict many wellto-do and insufficiently occupied people in this country. Russia was a favored object for this kind of escapism. From a distance, it looked mysterious and inviting, with just enough of wickedness and brytality to complete the allure. "Collaboration with Russia" had a fine liberal ring about it, and was something no one needed to be too precise about. It was easier and pleasanter to talk about than problems nearer home: race problems, labor problems, or slum control. And had not numbers of prominent people, including some in high government position, assured them that without "collaboration with Russia" there was no hone for the peace of the world?

For these people, it was clearly unsettling and unpleasant to be assured that, far from offering an escape from American realities, Russian-American relations demanded a courageous clearing away of many of the internal problems of this country, and that without a healthy, harmonious, and creditable arrangement of life et home, this country could never hope to bold the lead successfully in foreign affairs against touch, agressive political forces elsewhere in the world. And it was not pleasant for these people, whose main object was to avoid trouble, to be asked to believe that the road to a betterment of Russian-American relations lay only through a long, unpleasant process of setting will against will, force against force, idea against idea - through a process of conflict and dispute rather than through a happy collaboration for common ends.

A further problem was presented by those who had been leading public opinion locally in matters of foreign affairs: professors, commentators, lecturers, organizers, etc. For one thing, most of them had publicly taken one line or another with regard to Russia that was not in accord with what I had to say. Their amour propre was doubtless affected, in some instances, by hearing their views challenged from the pulnits, so to speak, of their own churches. Furthermore, I had the feeling that many of them had thrown themselves with particular enthusiasm into rosy forcasts of the prospects for Russian-American collaboration because they felt that there would be something in it for them, personally. This attitude had proved a popular drawing-card with interested audiences; and they saw themselves in the vanguard of a development which would eventually enhance their own glamour, prestige and importance. For this reason they were not in the mood to descend, as I was forced to ask them to do, to a sober and realistic view of the subject; and it seemed to me that many of them sat, listened, and departed in a troubled and sometimes sullen silence

The above considerations may account at least for some of the differences which I noted. In any case, by far the greatest resistance to what I had to say seemed to stem from the people who make a profession of talking to others about foreign affairs and from those to whom, for the most part, they had been talking.

Now taking up the audiences individually, the following may be said:

The Chicago Council on Foreign Relations people were, as mentioned above, a superior group. They were well informed and distinctly cosmopolitan in their approach. They seemed to have no geographic bias.

The Milwaukee Journal staff were a group of skentical and able newspapermen from one of the middle west's best papers. Their editor had returned from Germany only an hour or two before I spoke to them. They were well informed, hard-headed and grateful.

The Milwaukee League of Women Voters and the representatives of other organizations whom I met at a luncheon at the City Club, struck me as representing heither the brains nor the power of that community. There was something distinctly weary and faded about them. I never realized before I talked with that group how provincial was my native city, and I wondered in retrospect whether the effort had been worth while. The only note of appreciation came from a clergyman who viewed the effort strictly from a professional point of view and assured me approvingly that I had missed my calling.

The group of prominent Milwaukee business men (privately) assembled) to whom I spoke the next day presented quite a different picture. The whole atmosphere of the gathering was keen and vigorous. The questions were penetrating, challenging, and intelligent. It was evident into what channels energy and imagination flowed in that eminently practical and self-satisfied community.

I had little chance to judge the people in Seattle. My train was many hours late. I succeeded in arriving by airplane during the dinner, just in time to speak. I was suffering from an intestinal ailment which hounded me through the entire tour and had had almost nothing to eat all day. The meeting, consequently, was something of a tour de force. My impression was that the Seattle people were a fairly alert and well-informed group. But they did not exhibit the interest in the occasion itself that some of the other groups did. I did not see any of them before or after the meeting. The secretary offered to drive me around the next morning, if I so desired, but the offer was made with no great enthusiasm and I did not avail myself of it.

In Portland we were treated with great personal kindness, particularly by the man who appeared to be the guiding spirit of the Committee on Foreign Relations there, Mr.
Brewster. He struck me as a person of superior tact and understanding and I have no hesitation in saying that the Department can safely place confidence in him in public liaison work. In Portland, as in Seattle, the Committee on Foreign Relations appeared to be a stag affair. In any case, only men were present at the mostings. The Portland gathering was very informal, with a distinctly breezy, hardboiled western touch to it; but the people were open and friendly, even when they did not agree with me. They were one of the easiest groups to talk to, and I felt that the meeting was clearly successful:

San Francisco presented definitely the greatest problem of any of the places I visited. This was despite the fact that the meetings there were by far the most elaborately and carefully organized. I attribute this partly to the fact that the meetings were arranged by a central organization which is trying to hold under its maternal wing a number of other organizations for the study of international affairs which vary considerably in purpose, outlook and membership. I have the impression that for this reason the central organization sought to avoid any awkward facing of the issues which might have alienated one or another of the groups in question. The meetings thus acquired a fragile, cautious quality which I know cramped my style and I think must have cramped that of the audience. It even caused me to question the soundness of international study groups which do not take sides. There is something bloodless and timid about them. Before I left San Francisco I told some of them that I would have preferred it if they had separated all their listeners into the pros and the antis and had separate meetings for each of them and announced the meetings by saying that there's an s.o.b. by the name of Kennan who thinks he can come here and tell us something about Russian-American relations - now let's tear him to pieces. I would rather have faced such audiences than the wary, pussy-footing groups that I did meet, where everyone felt that the most important things were unsaid and that somehow or other it would have been frightfully inappropriate to say them.

After I talked to the Stanford group, which was the heaviest, I asked Harris, the head of the Russian-American Institute, who has a sense of humor, what was the matter with them. "Think nothing of it," he said, "That was just the academic kibitzer."

I am afraid that if I am to be frank I must note that two of the three meetings in San Francisco were among the academicians, and that there hung over them something of the intellectual snobbery and pretense, the jealousies and inhibitions, and the cautious herd-instinct which have a habit of creeping into college faculties, whether liberal or conservative, unless there are enough honest and courageous people to combat them. But added to this were two other elements which made things difficult. One of these was a bias against the State Department as such. The other was a geographic inferiority complex, if I may call it that; a feeling that the east, including the State Department, was haughty and supercilious and neglectful of the wisdom and vision which flourished in the centers of learning on the West Coast. Nowhere else did I encounter anything like the distrust and disparagement of the Department that I found in the academic world of the San Francisco region.

I had a Reeling that it stemmed partly from the fact that many of the professors there had an understandable yearning to be closer to the actual operations of diplomacy and a smeaking suspicion that if they were in on it, they could do it all much better. But the geographic element entered into it, too. There was a certain neurosis there: a resentment of the fact that things are estill centered in the east; a desire to see the Pacific area just as importantand recognized as being as important - as the Atlantic. This played a particularly noticeable role in the discussion of Russian questions, for I could see that many of my listeners viewed the development of "collaboration" with Russia as one of the things that was going to increase the activity and importance of their particular area. They had set high hopes on the development of relations across the Pacific between the West Coast of our country and Siberia. The noses were out of joint over the failure of these hopes to materialize, and they were inclined to put the blame on the State Department, whose shortcomings would provide a valid and convenient excuse, rather than on the Russians; for to admit that the latter were at fault would have been to admit that they themselves had been rash in their estimate of the situation. In short, many people on the West Coast were looking for a scapegoat on which to cast the blame for shattered hopes about Russia and about international collaboration in general, and the Department, being in the first place in the Fast, in the second place staffed by other Americans whom they envied and distrusted, and in the third place relatively defenseless, was a natural candidate.

There are two side-lights to this which deserve mention. There were many signs of strong direct Soviet interest and of real Communist activity among intellectual circles on the West Coast. I am not an alarmist about these things; but I have been connected with Russian affairs for too many years not to know the real thing when I see it, and I found more of it there than anywhere else I have been. This was particularly the case in San Francisco; and I had the feeling that the circles which Dr. Staley has gathered under his wing are easy meat for Soviet agents of every sort. I had no doubt at any of my meetings there that every word I said was being dutifully reported to the Soviet Consul before the day was out. There is no great harm in this, and I did not alter what I said for that reason; but if the Department has people going out there to talk on subjects more confidential in character, it had better exercise some check on who is admitted to the meetings.

The second side-light is the influence of the atomic scientists on opinion in that section. Some of these gentlemen were at the Berkeley meeting. The exact nature of their views is still nebulous to me; for they seemed to combine a grudging approval of Mr. Baruch's proposals for an International Atomic Fnergy Authority with an unshakeable faith that if they could only get some Soviet scientists by the button-hole and enlighten them about the nature of atomic weapons, all would be well. I don't think it had ever occurred to them that a realization of the tremendous destructive possibilities of atomic energy might be less inclined to scare the Russians into international collaboration than to whet their desire to find a way of using it without danger to themselves. Politically these people are as innocent as six year old maidens. In trying to explain things to them I felt like one who shatters the pure ideals of tender youth. But fortunately for them, they didn't believe much of what I said and left, I am sure, unshaken in the comfortable conviction that such evil as exists in the world has its seat in the State Department, which doesn't want to understand, and not by any chance in the breasts of upstanding foreign statesmen who await only the generous hand of friendship from our side and pledge of faith in the form of the secrets of the manufacture of atomic weapons.

The members of the Jonathan Club in Los Angeles seemed to be a rough-and-ready lot, mostly oil men, retired army officers, etc., untouched by liberalism and little inclined either to give or to seek confidence with foreign governments. If they, too, were skeptical about the State Department, it was an amused skepticism, based mostly on journal-istic tales of top hats and white spats, and not the tragic and brooding despair of liberal hearts in San Francisco. The Los Angeles people were unimpressed with the Department's request to keep the size of the meetings down. They had three hundred in the room and loud speakers all over the club, and it was obvious that they expected a real speech. So I shed my coat and let them have it, and they seemed to be pleased.

Beverly Hills, as you can imagine, was different, and the private group which Walter Wanger had gotten together was probably a good cross-section of that particular community. The group contained some very intelligent people, among whom I recall particularly young Douglas Fairbanks; but there was a certain detached quality about them, a form of casualness, which left me more or less paffled as to their reactions.

Incidentally, we had lunch in Hollywood with Mr. Goldwyn, found him impressed with his own ideological responsibilities as a maker of pictures, somewhat regretful of the Song of Russia, determined to visit Moscow as soom as possible and see for himself, but benevolent and entirely as possible and see for himself, but benevolent and entirely amenable to suggestion and argument from the official side. I personally feel that the Department should try to remain in regular touch with such people.

Pinally, there were my neighbors in Cettysburg. They came checrivity and peacefully, unencumbered - bless their hearts - by any protentions to knowledge of the subject or by any inordinate sense of responsibility about it. They listened humbly and intelliagently, and although I was warned that it was quite constantly and although I was warned that it was quite constantly and although I was because they proceedings and this wes nothing that should be taken as a slight to the speaker, they all stayed deenth awake throughout the evening. They asked for questions, because they were a little shy and braccustomed to that sort of thing. Besides, they hadn't thought much about it, and they don't think that fast. But they were among my best audiences, and if they ask me to talk to them each. I will happily do it. I had a faint sort of feeling that they were probably the most representative - and for that reason were probably the most representative - and for that reason the most important - of the people I reached.

Now this has turned out to be a longer report than I had anticipated, But I thought these were mostly things. you ought to know, for the guidance of any future official speakers.

Some time when we meet, perhaps we can discuss the morals which are to be drawn from this tale, particularly what to do about the state of mind of the liberal and academic people. I will only say, by way of conclusion, that I think this sort of work should be continued; and I think the Department should be careful to get people who are thoroughly familiar with their subjects by virtue of the practical work they have been doing and who can talk well enough to hold the attention of large groups of people. There is undoubtedly a crying need for a greater degree of contact between the Department and circles all over the country interested in foreign affairs; and the possibilities for constructive effort along this line are enormous.

I am returning to Washington Monday, to assume my new duties in the National War College, and you will be able to reach me there if there is any way I can be of further help to you.

Very sincerely,

THE MELLINGS VI MAICH ME' KENNVN SDOKE OF

"I want you to know that the visit to this vicinity of Mr. George Kennan was extraordinarily useful and was very much appreciated by all who had the opportunity of meeting with him.

"Mr. Kennan, as you doubtless know from other sources by this time, makes a remarkably fine impression. He is straight-forward and honest, and all the divergent opinion groups in his audiences seemed to feel that they got something real and worthwhile.

"It seems to me that this sort of thing, when it is done well in the manner in which Kennan and people of his type can do it, is enormously valuable from the point of view of the relations between the Department of State and the general public. It does more than anything else to live down the stareotype of the State Department as an aggregation of snatther real problems of this world and out of sympathy with the common man of America. One member of the Berkeley conference, a commentator on the radio for the CIO, asked me afterwards how representative Femren if Kennan is representative of a considerable group that is very encouraging. In other words, he found of the meeting."

"Mr. Kennan did an admirable job at both of these luncheons and peorle whom I knew only slightly went out of their way to tell me afterwards how much they enjoyed being present and hearing Mr. Kennan talk. reviously made, I talked Telegraphy

In accordance with the arrangements previously made, I talked to Mr. George F. Kennan on the afternoon of April 17, 1947. He stated that his purpose in calling at the Bureau was to call to the Bureau's attention the fact that there are numerous Russian Nationals who are being or could be alienated from their native Russia and who thereafter might be valuable sources of information, such as and others. He stated that numerous of these Russians have contacted him and that he is of the opinion that they may be in turn contacted by too many Government agencies. He states that by reason of his knowledge of the mental makeup of the Russian people, he does not believe this desirable and that he wanted to suggest to someone that there be set up something in the nature of a control over this work, that he had endeavored to interest CIG in attempting to make arrangements with some college or university whereby these people might be placed on the payroll to do research. translations and other work and to then work with representatives of the Government ment in furnishing information concerning conditions in Russia and other information of value to the Federal Government.

I advised Mr. Kennan that you are fully aware of the importance of this project and that you likewise had been concerned about the attempts of numerous agencies to interview these alienated Russians, that the Bureau had worked out arrangements with certain people in New York (meaning Countess Tolstoy), an arrangement whereby the Bureau was notified when any of these Russians expatriated themselves and that you had endeavored to have the interviews confined to the FBI, but that in too many instances, ONI, G-2 or other agencies were desirous of trying to exploit the individual Russian and attempted to conduct their own interviews with them.

Mr. Kennan stated he was very pleased to know that you recognized the problem of handling these Russian expatriates inasmuch as he was fearful no one was attempting to coordinate this work. He stated that he recognized fully that you could not push the Russian people and could not obtain all information in their possession on a mere interview without first gaining their confidence.

It appeared that Mr. Kennan had this problem on his mind and merely wanted to discuss it with someone. He left very pleased in the way the Bureau not only recognized the problem, but also handled it.

has advised the following which may be of interest and assistance to the Bureau:
While in Moscow the informant on many occasions had opportunity to observe GEORCE F. KENNAN, then Minister-Counselor of the United States Embassy at Moscow. The informant confidential reports to the United States Department of State concerning the operations of the Russian Government, the political, economic, and state of health conditions of the Russian people. Kennan had also submitted individual reports analyzing the personalities of the men prominent in the Soviet regime. advises that the reports prepared by Kennan were numerous and voluminous. In his considered opinion they are valuable documents because their author is a keen observer, a careful thinker and an able writer.
Kennan past his evaluation of some of his fellow workers in the Embassy at Moscow which were not, in many instances, of a complimentary nature. However, Kennan does have a loyalty to all of his fellow employees in the State Department and is certain he would never criticize any of them "on the record." To the contrary, is certain that if any of these fellow workers were to become the centers of public controversy then Kennan would do all in his power to lessen criticism of them.
further stated he has received information that Kennan is very likely the author of the essay treatise which appeared in "Life" concerning our foreign relations with Russia. The article was designated as having been written by "X."
further relates that the former Assistant Secretary of State, Dean Achson, the State Department was not inclined to regard Kennan's reports too favorably.
The foregoing has been furnished the Bureau for informative purposes and no action is suggested by the Boston Office. It can be noted, however, that if it were possible through a confidential source to obtain the documents prepared by Kennan they might well be of assistance to Division #5.

SUBJECT:

GEORGE F. KENNAN

COUNSELOR, STATE DEPARTMENT

(BUREAU CONTACT)

While Mr. Roach was in conversation with Mr. George F. Kennan, Counselor of the State Department, recently, Kennan stated that he would like to have the Director informed that in the near future he intends to accept the courtesies extended to him by Mr. Michael W. Straus, Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, to use his, Straus's home in Washington during the summer months. He stated that he is well aware of Mr. Straus's ultra-liberal views and did not want the Bureau to gain the mistaken idea that he, Kennan, is of the same political leanings as Straus. Mr. Kennan explained that he has known Straus since boyhood; and although he does not agree with Straus on his political thinking, he is nevertheless a friend of his and a person with whom he has had a social acquaintanceship for a long time.

Mr. Kennan recently gave up his home in Georgetown in anticipation of his retirement from the Government. He moved his family to his farm in Pennsylvania but now finds it necessary to live during the summer in Washington. This is the reason for accepting Mr. Straus's invitation to use his home near Rock Creek Park while Mr. Straus and his wife are out of the city.

As you know, Michael Straus is an individual about whom the Bureau knows considerable with reference to his left-wing political leanings. A loyalty case was completed on him on March 10, 1948. The CSC advised on May 6, 1949, that he was being retained. Straus also complained to the Attorney General in November, 1949, regarding the use of his name in two Voice of America Cases handled by the Bureau.

The purpose of this memorandum is to submit a brief review of the above-captioned article, which will, no doubt, receive widespread comment in the American press and will be referred to frequently by different writers, speakers, etc., on the subject of Communism and Russia.

BACKGROUND:

PURPOSE:

As you know, George F. Kennan has for over thehty years pursued a career with the Department of State, reaching the position of head of the long-range Policy in Planning Committee. His diplomatic thesis in relation to Russia has been this: Soviet Russia cannot be reached or influenced through the medium of Western political terms, (e.g., liberal democracy, etc.) or philosophical concepts; that Russia holds capitalism to be incompatible with Communism, hence, Russian suspicion of us and all our actions. Further, the ultimate objective of Soviet Russia is a World Soviet Union. In the light of this, United States foreign policy should be one of tranquil firmness and "containment" of Russian expansion and conquest. His main idea is that as a result of this policy of containment, Russia can be expected in time to either cooperate with the United States or suffer internal collapse.

These views were presented by a Mr. X (reported to be George F. Kennan) in an article entitled "The Sources of Soviet Conduct," Foreign Affairs, July, 1947, and in a briefer form in Life of July 28, 1947.

Kennan left the State Department some time ago to engage in advanced study at Princeton University. He is also a member of the Editorial Advisory Board of Foreign Affairs: An American Quarterly Review. You will recall that George F. Kennan has always been friendly to the Bureau, furnishing pertinent and helpful information when in the State Department etc. RECORDED - 66' / 62-81 sorge F. Kennan, the kis new article "America and the Russe Future, " propounds gertain well-defined ideas.

DETAILS:

WCS:tgk

adum

These ideas may be outlined as follows:

- I. The strength and vigor with which we Americans condemn and reject the thought and practices of the present rulers of Russia demonstrate how ardently we want new and different thoughts and practices in the Kremlin.
 - A. Some Americans have and are speculating about a war as a means of achieving the desired end in Russia.
 - 1. To assume that war against Russia, that a military decision would result in the creation of a Russia acceptable to Americans, is a gross error, a false assumption.
 - a. Military decisions are not positive and final.
 - b. Military victories at best are only relatively successful.
 - c. Military victory would not assure the form of government we would want in Russia, or social progress.
 - B. Therefore, a Russian nation which would be acceptable to democratic Americans is not a question to be decided by war.
 - 1. Nor is it a question to be decided by peace per se; for this we now have, and the issue remains.
 - C. In order to determine the future relationship between Russia and the United States, profound thought and concentrated attention must be given to two major factors. These are:
 - 1. The United States must know what it wants.
 - 2. The United States must know how to get what it wants; how to conduct itself so as to facilitate the bringing into existence of an acceptable Russia rather than doing things that would impede this.

- D. What the United States should seek must not be an Americanized Russia.
 - 1. Russia will not be in the foreseeable future a liberal, democratic, capitalist, or private-enterprise-oriented nation as is the United States.
 - 2. Russian history, culture, social mores, and psychology preclude any hope of Americanizing Russia, even if such were desirable.
- E. What the United States should hope for is a Russia which truly expresses the nature and aspirations of the Russian people as a whole. This means:
 - 1. We must hope for "a Russian government which, in contrast to the one we know today, would be tolerant, communicative and forthright in its relations with other states and peoples."
 (p. 357)
 - a. Russians could establish this type of government without sacrificing or abolishing all its socialistic forms of social organization.
 - 2. We must hope for a Russian government which, while retaining the right to govern its internal affairs, as it sees fit, as its own business, should nevertheless firmly restrict the exercise of its state authority "short of that fairly plain line beyond which lies totalitarianism."

 (p. 358) Totalitarianism and the human enslavement and degradation within Russia which follow it, cannot be recognized by the United States.
 - 3. We must hope for a new Russia which will not only cease to oppress its own people but also one which "will refrain from pinning an oppressive yoke on other peoples who have the instinct and the capacity for national self-assertion." (p. 359)

- F. The United States must not only hope for the above-described Russia of the future; it must also work toward its creation.
- G. The different means which the United States can utilize in helping to create the new and preferable Russia are:

1. Direct Action

- a. This includes the possibility of warfare, either a series of minor wars or one great major war.
- b. Warfare is a highly undesirable means of creating the new Russia and must be avoided if at all possible, because, among other things, it is a form of bankruptcy for us all."
 (p. 363)
- c. Should war come, however, we must keep in mind that it alone cannot create a new Russia; that the positive, constructive action which follows war must do so. fore, even in war we must not lose sight of. our goals; we must bend the weapons of war toward the realization of these goals. means adopting a mature, sensible, understanding attitude toward the Russian people. (We failed to do this with the Germans to our detriment.) "We will get nowhere with an attitude of emotional indignation directed toward an entire people. Let us rise above these easy and childish reactions and consent to view the tragedy of Russia as partly our own tragedy. and the people of Russia as our comrades in the long hard battle for a happier system of man's coexistence with himself and with nature on this troubled planet." (p. 365) It will help to keep in mind that: "Totalitarianism is not a national phenomenon; it is a disease to which all humanity is in some degree vulnerable." (p.365)

2. Indirect Action

- a. This includes the possibility of continuing our present state of tension, suspicion, armed peace and the "cold war" with Russia.
- b. Under such conditions actions are necessarily indirect, relative to creating a new Russia. In the light of such conditions, can there be any hope that a new and preferable Russia can be gradually created without warfare?
- c. The answer is "Yes"; there is hope. There is no "proof," but there is hope. This hopeful answer "is partly a matter of opinion and judgement, but partly, admittedly, an act of faith." (p. 365)
- d. This act of faith is predicated upon this fact: "There can be no genuine stability in any system which is based on the evil and weakness in man's nature—which attempts to live by man's degradation, feeding like a vulture on his anxieties, his capacity for hatred, his susceptibility to error, and his vulnerability to psychological manipulation. Such a system can represent no more than the particular frustrations and bitterness of the generation of men who created it, and the cold terror of those who have been weak or unwise enough to become its agents." (p. 366)
- E. Soviet Russia today is such a system, therefore, Soviet Russia can know "no genuine stability." It cannot endure. Changes may be expected. Human nature will express itself. It cannot and will not forever remain in the prison of Soviet power.
- f. Just how these changes will take place without warfare are not at present fully discernable because "we must admit with respect to the future of government in Russia, we see 'as through a glass darkly.'" (p. 368) They may come "by erosion from despotism" or "by the violent upthrust of liberty"; we cannot say which it will be. (p.368)

- g. For the United States, if committed over a long period of time to indirect action, "the main thing is that we keep clearly in mind the image of what we would like to see in the personality of Russia as an actor on the world stage, and let that be our guide in all our dealings with Russian political factions, including both that which is in power and those which are in opposition to it." (p. 368) Above all we must avoid doing anything which would hamper or prevent desired changes from taking place.
- h. Among the things we must avoid doing are
 (1) imposing or forcing "foreign inspiration or advice" on Russia; (2) attempting to undermine Soviet Russia by foreign propaganda injected into its national life; (3) discussing Russian problems in our own terms exclusively; (4) propounding a point of view which is not relevant, practical or understandable to the average Russian citizen. The impulse for change must spring from the heart of the Russian people. It must come from the inside to the outside. It cannot be forced from the outside to the inside. We can by our national behavior facilitate this natural impulse for change; we cannot manufacture it.
- i. The United States can best facilitate a change in the Russian government and society toward more preferable social conditions by being an excellent example to Russia and to the world. The light of this example can penetrate into Soviet Russia with good results:

"For these reasons, the most important influence that the United States can bring to bear upon internal developments in Russia will continue to be the influence of example: the influence of what it is, and not only what it is to others but what it is to itself. This is not to say that many of those things which are now preoccupying the public mind are not of unquestioned importance: such things as physical strength, armaments, determination and solidarity with "other free nations. It is not to deny the urgent and overriding necessity for a wise and adroit foreign policy... But they can only remain sterile and negative if they are not given meaning and substance by something which goes deeper and looks further ahead than the mere prevention of war or the frustration of imperialistic expansion. To this, there is general agreement; but what is this 'something'? Many people think it only a question of what we urge upon others, in other words, a question of external propaganda. I would submit that it is primarily a question of what we urge upon ourselves. It is a question of the spirit and purpose of American national life itself. Any message we may try to bring to others will be effective only if it is in accord with what we are to ourselves, and if this is something sufficiently impressive to compel the respect and confidence of a world which, despite all its material difficulties, is still more ready to recognize and respect spiritual distinction than material opulence.

"Our first and main concern must still be to achieve this state of national character. We need worry less about convincing others that we have done so. In the lives of nations the really worthwhile things cannot and will not be hidden. Thoreau wrote:

'There is no ill which may not be dissipated, like the dark, if you let in a stronger light upon it... If the light we use is but a paltry and narrow taper, most objects will cast a shadow wider than themselves.'

"Conversely, if our taper is a strong one we may be sure that its rays will penetrate to the Russian room and eventually play their part in dissipating the gloom which prevails there. No iron curtain could suppress, even in the innermost depths of Siberia, the news that America had shed the shackles of disunity, confusion and doubt, had taken a new lease of hope and determination, and was setting about her tasks with enthusiasm and clarity of purpose." (pp. 369-370)

OBSERVATION:

Like the previous 1947 article attributed to George F. Kennan, entitled "The Sources of Soviet Conduct." it is most probable that this recent article, "America and the Russian Future," will be read widely, analyzed, discussed and debated for some time in the different American channels of the written and spoken word. Further, it is not likely that Kennan wrote and published this article without first submitting and securing the approval of the top officials of the State Department. Therefore, one might reasonably conclude, 'bearing in mind Kennan's affinity to high ranking officials of the State Department that this article could be: (1) a trial balloon designed to test and evaluate the reaction of the American public to such a course of action; (2) a trial balloon at the same time designed to test and evaluate the reaction of Russian officials; (3) an unofficial outlining of ways and means to Russia by which the present diplomatic deadlock can be broken and the "cold war" ended; (4) a decisive portrayal in substance of what can be expected in our foreign policy of the future; or (5) an adroit combination, subject to change itself, of all the above factors.

In any event and irrespective of the soundness or unsoundness of Kennan's ideas, this article appears to be an important statement on a vital subject, worthy of the attention and thought of all government officials.

NOTE: The Liaison Section advised that Mr. Kennan was formerly with the Embassy at Moscow for 5 years. Upon his return to the U.S. he came to the FBI for a panel discussion of Russian activities. He was later made head of the planning group of the State Department. During his tenure of office in this capacity he had a weekly session with the FBI liaison representative and briefed him on the inside story of that Department's activities. The Bureau in turn made available confidential information to him. There is no known information which might preclude a letter of congratulations in this instance. Reds Accept GeorgeKennan As U.S. Envoy

White House Announces Nomination of Expert As Pravda Blasts Him 🦠

President Truman announced early last night that George F Kennan, credited with originating the American policy of "containment" of Russia, would be nominated as Ambassador to Moscow.

Although the official Communist Party organ, Pravda, renewed. a running Russian attack on Kennan as late as yesterday, his appointment has been officially agreed to by the Kremlin. White House press secretary Joseph Short told reporters at Inde-pendence, Mo., that—in accordance with invariable diplomatic practice-Mr. Truman had asked Russia for formal acceptance of the intended envoy, and had received it.

Kennan, on leave from the State Department for more than a year, succeeds Ambassador Alan G. Kirk, to whose resignation President Truman "reluctantly agreed to accede," Short said.

Not yet 48, Kennan has long been recognized as the State Department's foremost authority on Russia. Almost half of his life has been devoted to its study. He outlined his now famous "containment" policy in an originally anonymous article in the periodical "Foreign Affairs" in 1947.

A graduate of Princeton in 1925, Kennan entered the for-See KENNAN, Page 2, Column 3 eign service the next year and subsequently had two long as-signments in Moscow, as counselor of Embassy under both W. Averell Harriman and W. Bedell Smith. He was director of the State Department's Policy Planning Staff from May, 1947, until January 1, 1950. From August 4, 1949, until September 2, 1950, he served as Counselor of the Department.

He went on extended leave to work at the Institute for Advanced Studies in Princeton, N. J., and later became president of the Ford Foundation's East European fund. It was for his work in that capacity, from which he resigned last month that he was attacked yesterday in Prayda.

A correspondent of the Communist organ in the United States wrote a dispatch noting Kennan's position in the fund and said that it was fostering "underground activity of various anti-Soviet agents and the conduct of subversive anti-Soviet propaganda."

Word of Kennan's prospective appointment leaked out last month. Asked about it, President Truman said he thought Kennan would make a good ambassador to Moscow and "ought to know his way around" there.

Short said no date had yet been set for Kirk to step down and for Kennan's nomination to be sent to the Senate. He said, however, that Kirk would return to this country after finishing his present assignment as an adviser to the American delegation at the current U.N. General Assembly meeting in Paris.

Dear Mr. Hoover:

It was very kind of you to send me your letter of December 27 and I greatly appreciate your thoughtfulness.

You will know, I am sure, that I have no illusions about what I may be able to accomplish in my assignment to Moscow; but I am going to have to do my best to live up to the expressions of confidence which so many people have sent me.

I am grateful for your offer of assistance, and I will surely remember it.

With all good wishes,

Very sincerely,

RELEASE AT 9:00 P.M. EST)

(KENNAN) SCRANTON, PA. --GEORGE F. KENNAN, U.S. AMBASSADOR RECENTLY KICKED OUT OF RUSSIA, ASSERTED THAT UNCHECKED INVESTIGATIONS INTO THE LOYALTY OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYES ARE "PLAYING VERY DANGEROUSLY INTO THE HANDS" OF

THE KREMLIN. HE SAID IT SHOULD BE A RELATIVELY SIMPLE MATTER FOR THE COMMUNISTS 06 -1 TO SPREAD MALICIOUS RUMORS ABOUT ANY PERSON THEY WANT REMOVED FROM GOVERNMENT SERVICE AND HAVE HIM OUSTED. THE THOUGHT, HE SAID, MUST BE CAUSE FOR REJOICING IN MOSCOW.

"AS THINGS STAND TODAY, I CAN SEE NO REASON WHY MALICIOUS PEOPLE SHOULD HAVE ANY PARTICULAR DIFFICULTY IN RENDERING UNAVAILABLE FOR SERVICE TO THIS COUNTRY ALMOST ANY PERSONS WHOM THEY MIGHT SELECT FOR

THIS TREATMENT, " HE SAID. "ALL THAT IS NECESSARY IS TO RELEASE A SPATE OF RUMORS AND GOSSIP AND DEMANDS FOR INVESTIGATION."

KENNAN MADE THE STATEMENT IN AN ADDRESS PREPARED FOR A DINNER MEETING AT THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE BAR ASSOCIATION. IT WAS HIS FIRST DETAILED AT THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE BAR ASSOCIATION. IT WAS HIS FIRST DETAILED ACCOUNT OF U.S.-SOVIET RELATIONS SINCE THE RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT DECLARED

HIM "PERSONA NON GRATA."

KENNAN LISTED A SET OF PRINCIPLES WHICH HE SAID SHOULD BE ADOPTED BY AMERICANS TO MAKE THEIR STRUGGLE WITH RUSSIA A SUCCESS. ONE OF THE MOST IMPORTANT OF THOSE, HE SAID, IS UNITY.

TO DEVELOP PROPER UNITY, KENNAN SAID, "THERE MUST BE A MARKED CHANGE IN THE TONE AND TEMPER OF PUBLIC LIFE OVER WHAT IT HAS BEEN IN THE PAST PERIOD...PARTICULARLY IN THE TREATMENT OF THESE QUESTIONS OF CIVIC LOYALTY THAT ARE SO CLOSELY BOUND UP WITH THE COMMUNIST PROBLEM."

THE STATE DEPARTMENT OFFICIAL SAID THIS IS A DELICATE SUBJECT AND HE IS LIKELY TO BE CRITICIZED "BY IMPASSIONED ELEMENTS IN OUR PRESS

AND PUBLIC* FOR STATING HIS IDEAS.

"BUT, " HE SAID, "IT IS TOO IMPORTANT TO PASS BY IN ANY DISCUSSION OF THE PROBLEMS I AM TALKING ABOUT TONIGHT."

KENNAN SAID THAT 20 YEARS AGO HE AND OTHERS CONCERNED WITH SOVIET MATTERS WERE AFRAID THE AMERICAN PUBLIC WOULD NOT GUARD CAREFULLY

ENOUGH AGAINST COMMUNIST INFILTRATION INTO GOVERNMENT.
BUT TODAY, HE SAID, HIS WORRY IS JUST THE OPPOSITE -- THAT THROUGH EXAGGERATING THE DIMENSIONS OF THIS DANGER AND FAILING TO PUT IT INTO PROPER PERSPECTIVE WITH THE OTHER PROBLEMS BEFORE US WE MAY BE CREATING WEAKNESSES IN OUR SOCIETY GREATER THAN ANYTHING COMMUNIST PENETRATION ITSELF EVER WAS LIKELY TO ACHIEVE. **

HIS PRINCIPLES OF GUIDANCE ALSO URGED AMERICA TO BE STRONG SO ITS WORDS WILL BE RESPECTED, COOL-HEADED AND DELIBERATE, PREPARED TO NEGOTIATE AT STRATEGIC TIMES AND NOT TO BE TOO IMPATIENT IN THE FIELD OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Shortly before assuming his post as Amenasador in Moscov, George Kennen, at the request of Dean Acheson, made a confidential report on his views and post experience concerning the USSR. This report fell into the hands of the Soviets and it was reported to a French Counterintelligence agency that the indiscretion had been committed by Michells, an attache at the British Subsery in Moscow. His Intention it is reported was to discredit the new American Admissiptor in Mossow as much as possible, so as to leave a clear field for sir Alvery Cascoigne in dealing with the Krealin, chiefly for the entrant deventage of the British. The Minnan report, along with the Parker blook, has been serving as a basis for Radio Moscow's propaganda against Lennas. 2. It is certain that photocopical of Kennan's confidential report are in the hands of British intelligence. Another misfortune also befull Mr. Kennen in Moscov. In 1951, while in Paris. Kennon had contacted Jean-Paul Fevil and do Goulle, as well as representatives of the Polish underground. Be believed that he had made these contacts discussily enough to have remained unebserved; however, when he arrived in Moscov, the Moscov Redia gave an account of his Paris meetings.

RUSSIA and the WEST

The totalitarian threat reflects the weakness of our society

XTERNAL CONFLICT is nothing new in Russian history.

Beginning national life on an exposed plain with few natural barriers or defenses, with no older tradition of political legitimacy, faced with fierce and implacable nomadic enemies, the Russian people have had a national experience punctuated at every point by rivalry, conflict and violence. The wars of Tsarist Russia, like those of most other Continental powers, were primarily with her immediate neighbors. The issue was normally the control of land area and of the human beings resident on it. In this long, painful process, certain personal qualities of the Great Russians (not all of them attractive ones) combined with geographical circumstances and with the impact of external historical developments to enable the Great Russians to make themselves the center of a national-state, to take into that state a number of other peoples of different national character, and to extend the power of this political entity to a point where it came to embrace the entire great plain running from the Baltic Sea, the slopes of the Carpathians and the mouths of the Danube in the West to the Altai mountains and (farther north) the shores of the Pacific in the East.

Naturally, in a process as vast as this, conflict was always present. But this conflict was usually of a nature normal to the habits of the locale and the life of the times. Russia's wars were at no time dissimilar, in early centuries, to wars occurring simultaneously among other rulers and political entities. For her neighbors, Russia was a problem, as indeed the neighbors often were for her. For the remaining world, she was hardly more than a fabulous remote principality, from which travelers returned with lurid tales of the barbaric splendor of the court, the squalor and degradation of the people, the monotony of the landscape and the rigors of the climate.

It is true that in these earlier times, particularly in the days of the Grand Duchy of Muscovy [before the sixteenth century—ED.], many things were noted by foreign observers that seem now, in retrospect, to have had a certain prophetic tinge. Traits were indeed becoming visible in old Muscovy that were destined later to play an important part in the psychological composition of Soviet power. There was a tendency to a messianic concept of Russia's role in history, an intolerance of foreign outlooks and values, a pronounced xenophobia on the part of Russian officialdom, an insistence on isolating the Russian people from foreign contact, a secretiveness and deviousness of diplomatic practice, a seeming inability to-understand anything in the nature of a permanently peaceful and equal relationship between states, a tendency to view every treaty of peace as being in the nature of a provisional armistice, a tendency to think of conflict as the normal, peace as the provisional and abnormal.

All these things are, of course, striking when measured against the habits of thought prevalent today in Moscow. Yet, we must remember that many of these features of the early Russian outlook were more common in their own context of time and place than they are today. The tendency to universality of political aspiration, for example, was less startling in a time when the Byzantine Empire was only just disappearing and when the religious wars of the West had not yet reached their climax. What is really strange is not so much that the Grand Duchy of Muscovy should have shown the traits it did in the fifteenth to seventeenth centuries, but rather that a political regime of the twentieth century should have manifested so powerful an atavistic urge and groped so far back into a largely irrelevant past for its political habits and outlook.

In the intervening Petersburg era—the period of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, when Russia began for the first time to emerge into the affairs of Europe in the capacity of a great power—there was less of this sort of thing. During this period, it was primarily in the physical growth of the Russian state rather than in any peculiarities of the official Russian outlook that observant people began to sense the pattern of the future.

True, certain of these peculiarities, reminiscent of old-Muscovite patterns and prophetic of Soviet ones, were not wholly absent during those centuries. It is further true that, as the new Russian intelligentsia reacted with increasing sharpness and skepticism to the powerful Western influence under which much of Russian cultural life had developed in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, there was a return, particularly among the Slavophile philosophers and historians, to a sort of romantic repudiation of Western values, combined with Few Americans can discuss Russia as authoritatively as George F. Kennan: first, because he has devoted a lifetime of study to Russian civilization; second, because he has served in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow twice, the latter time as Ambassador: finally, because his contempt for totalitarianism in all forms has always been matched by sympathy for its victims. Mr. Kennan's famous article in Foreign Affairs in 1947 launched the American policy of resistance to Communism; another article in 1951, "America and the Russian Future," placed the anti-Communist struggle in the perspective of an international civil war, rather than a racial or national rivalry. Both articles, along with other provocative essays, appear in Mr. Kennan's widely circulated book, American Diplomacy 1900-1950. The article on these pages is an abridgment of a paper Mr. Kennan delivered at a conference on "The Problem of Soviet Imperialism," sponsored by the School of Advanced International Studies of Johns Hopkins University. (The proceedings of the conference will be published shortly in book form by the Johns Hopkins Press.) Although Mr. Kennan's recommendations for action can be criticized as unduly cautious, we consider the basic historical analysis in this paper so accurate and objective as to warrant close and thoughtful study by all those concerned with the Communist threat. The cool truth of Mr. Kennan's prose is a deadly antidote to reams and years of propaganda versions of history.

a messianic belief in Russia's own destiny. What seemed to many Russian thinkers to be the decadence of the West—its dreary bourgeois narrowness of thought and behavior—stimulated this sense of repudiation.

But all these things, while faintly prophetic, were not yet really expressive of the East-West relationship as we know it today. This relationship is mainly the product of certain developments of the present century, some of which were, to be sure, of a coincidental nature, but most of which represented the final coming together of great historical movements, bound sooner or later to meet, to impinge on one another and to require mutual accommodation. Let us see what some of these things might be.

The first of these developments was certainly the rounding out of the expansion of the Russian state to a point where further expansion was practically impossible except at the price of conflict with some other great power. Hand in hand with this went the development of Russia into one of the world's major military and industrial powers. It is sometimes forgotten that this was a process well on the way to completion before the Revolution. In the forty years prior to World War I, Russia had been the scene of a fairly stormy industrial development. It seems to me there is reason to suppose that, had this process not been interrupted by wars and revolution, the normal workings of the free-enterprise system would have produced by this time a level of industrial strength in the traditional Russian territory roughly comparable to what we have before us today.

The second of these great historical developments was World War I and its effects both in Russia and the West. So far as Russia is concerned, the outstanding effect was, of course, the capture of power throughout most of traditional Russia by a group of men led by Lenin and inspired by the Marxist ideology as Lenin had developed it.

This meant that Russia had come under the control of men committed to a belief in the unsoundness and iniquity of the social system which, to one degree or another, all the other Western countries maintained and were destined to continue to maintain for a long time in the future. How this curiously twisted and fanatical belief came to find its political home precisely in Russia -a country that fitted very poorly into the Marxist pattern-is another story. It is important to note that this belief on the part of the early Bolshevik leaders was not merely one of detached historical and social interpretation: It was something that involved intimately their own responsibility and actions. The deplorable state of the peoples languishing (as they saw it) under the voke of capitalism was, for them, not just something to be noted and regretted: It was something they, as good international Marxists, as Leninist-Marxists in particular, had an obligation to do something about. The cause of the proletariat everywhere was their cause. They were the revolutionaries of every country, not just of their own. They challenged the legitimacy and usefulness of every capitalistic government, not just the one under which they happened to have been born.

And thus, when these men appropriated to themselves the powers of government in most of the territory known to the world traditionally as "Russia," a new situation was created. With that act, the exercise of internal power in Russia had become associated with a program aiming in effect at the overthrow by force of every Western government and the establishment in power in every Western capital of a violent, embittered, defiant minority group, contemptuous of all real national tradition, challenging most of the accepted national values, hating almost everything their countrymen loved, amenable only to the discipline of the rulers of a foreign state. This was a condition without precedent in modern Western history. It represented, from the standpoint of international custom, a retrogressive step: a throw-back to the religious wars of past ages, to the quest for universal secular power in the name of an exclusive and intolerant ideology.

At a happier time, at a time when Western society was in possession of its full strength and health, this sort of program and outlook on the part of the Soviet leaders might merely have been ignored and ridiculed and left to expose itself for the childish impertinence that, in essence, it was. Theoretically, this would have been all the easier in the early days of Soviet power, for the reason that Russia was then undergoing a moment. of great physical weakness. The fact that the Marxist-Leninist outlook was associated with the resources of the Russian state added little in those early days to its physical power. The Bolshevik leaders could rant and denounce: they could attempt to sow doubt and dissension in the Western world. But they had little to draw on in the way of physical resources from the territory under their control. And when, in December of 1918, the new Soviet Government appropriated two million rubles for the promotion of world revolution, this naive gesture was actually a revelation of its physical helplessness in the face of the vast task its leaders had marked out for themselves.

Initially, the real difficulty lay not in the control by these men of the resources of an established state but in the fact that they had come to power, armed with this amazing theoretical challenge to the soundness of Western institutions, precisely at a time when the West, generally, was abnormally sick and weak, exhausted and shattered by the terrible effects of World War I, showing on every hand the signs of strain and shock, its confidence shaken in its own traditions and institutions. The war had not only created new dislocations which were poorly understood and affected people with feelings of restlessness and frustration, but it had also exacerbated changes of a long-term nature already in progress in Western society and themselves calling for painful and drastic adjustments.

In the years following the prodigious bloodletting of the First World War, weaknesses and deficiencies stood out all over on the body of Western civilization. It was an easy thing for the Bolsheviks, with their glib and "simpliste" philosophy, to portray as basic weaknesses of the capitalistic system things that were actually direct consequences of the great physical and spiritual debauch that modern war invariably represents, or part of the normal tensions of growth and change, made more crucial and painful by the effects of the war. The sparks thrown out by the Moscow leaders, supported by the emotional vitality of a primitive society, struck fire in many places in the tired, shaken Western world, wherever it was weak or divided or lacking in confidence in itself. In this way, a curious bond was struck between the Lenin and Trotsky: When they appropriated two million rubles for world revolution, it was a revelation of physical helplessness.

Russian Revolution and the tensions and discontents of Western civilization everywhere.

Previously, the great countries of the West had been left to work out their internal trials largely in their own way, through the free play of indigenous forces, failure and weakness rendering them more vulnerable only against the limited aspirations of Western neighbors. Now, just at a time when the internal tensions were greatest, an external enemy arose—an enemy not created but self-inspired and self-declared—so constituted as to take advantage of every centrifugal tendency, every element of self-doubt, every element of sickness or of weakness in Western civilization.

From that time onward, the germ of Communist oversimplification rode like a malignant bacillus, ever present in the veins of Western society, powerless to disrupt the functioning of the organism so long as health and vigor were present but ready to seize on the slightest ulterior weakness in order to poison, to disintegrate and to kill. From the day of the Russian Revolution, the society of the West came to be haunted by a species of foreign demon, geared to take advantage of every gap between Western ideals and Western performance, implacably determined to make the West be all that it purported to be and live up to its highest pretensions or accept the horror of totalitarian rule by its own criminal elements in the interests of a foreign state.

Miraculously enough, considering the conditions of the Western world in 1918, nowhere except in Russia herself did society succumb to this demon in those ensuing years. Everywhere in the Western world, even in the new and untried states of Eastern Europe, health and strength proved sufficient to resist the virus. Communist parties remained, but they ceased to constitute in most countries any immediate revolutionary threat; they came more and more to be a sort of traditional fixture of the Western state—a curious receptacle into which there could be poured, decade after decade, all that fringe of the human species that tended by nature to turn against its human environment and to seek fulfillment of its own ego in the defiance of all that others believed and cherished. (Such people always exist; they are a mutation of the species. The presence of real grievances and hardships has only a remote relation to their state of mind. Their trouble is subjective; and if it arises originally in environmental factors, as I suppose it often does, these factors are never-but really never-the ones of which they are conscious, of which they complain and against which they inveigh.)

As the ideological threat of Soviet power declined, the physical strength of the territory and peoples under Soviet rule began to increase. The ravages of the war were gradually overcome. Russia began to resume the march of economic and military development which had been in progress before World War I. In this way, with the passage of the decades, the Soviet leaders moved steadily away from their role as intellectual and political gadflies for the Western countries, and closer to the traditional role of Russian rulers competing for position amid the territorial and military rivalries of the Eastern European and Asiatic areas.

This situation might have existed for many years, and with no greater detriment to world stability than it had involved in the years of the nineteenth century, had World War I really settled the problems over which it was fought. But this was precisely what it failed to do. What people believed to be a settlement was actually only a state of mutual exhaustion.

The war had arisen from a serious element of disunity in Western society: This was the profound disagreement as to the place which the German people, having suddenly emerged on the European scene as a powerful and vigorous national entity, were to have in the European scheme of things. But since the war had failed to lead to any real political settlement on this point (and by that I mean a settlement roughly acceptable to both parties) and had only produced conditions bound to exacerbate the issue, the entire disagreement emerged again in the Thirties in a new, more virulent and more horrible form, in the form of Adolf Hitler and the movement he headed. And in Hitler's aims and methods—marking as they did the most grievous disunity among the Western nations, attended by a readiness on his part to use force against the others, and coupled with the military weakness of the Western democracies—there lay the historic opportunity of which Moscow could hardly fail to take advantage.

Once the battle was on between Hitler and the Western democracies, neither party in the Western quarrel was strong enough to carry out its purpose completely without Soviet help. The Nazis needed help in the form of the non-aggression pact in the early period; the Western Allies needed help in the form of 180 Soviet divisions in the later phase. For their inability to fight each other without invoking Soviet assistance both sides paid a price. That price was, in large part, the installation of Soviet military and political power over half of Europe in 1945. And there is perhaps a deep historical justice in the fact that that price is being paid today in almost equal measure by the Germans and their Western adversaries in the recent war.

In saying this, I am not seeking to exculpate Hitler and his associates from their heavy responsibility. There could have been no greater betrayal of Western civilization than the mad path on which they embarked in 1938 and 1939. The Nazis confronted the Western powers with the most impossible and tragic of choices. All the hysterical cries and warnings of Goebbels about the Bolshevik menace in the final days of the war could not wipe out this dark responsibility. But the Nazi era was only the last act in a tragic drama that had run through several decades. And for the earlier course of that drama all of us who were prominently involved, and that includes ourselves in the United States, had a share of the blame.

It was Western disunity that brought the Soviets into Europe for the first time as a military power capable of placing a temporary veto on the restoration of hope and stability to the European scene. Likewise, it was the tragedy of the Western impact on Asia—the long record of superficiality and selfishness and pretentiousness vis-àvis impressionable and observant peoples—that made possible-the-neuroses-and-illusions-on which Soviet influence feeds today in that area. [For reasons of space, an earlier section of Mr. Kennan's paper developing this point at length has been eliminated.—ED.]

The distinguished French scholar, A. Rossi, once observed in connection with the phenomenon of domestic Communism that "error must... always be regarded as a crisis in the internal development of truth." It may be said, similarly, that for the Western world the Soviet threat is primarily an internal crisis in the West's own development. In this appreciation there lies, in my conviction, the key to an understanding of the correct method of approach to the Soviet problem.

Now up to this point I have said nothing about the peoples of the Soviet Union, or about the regime under which they are languishing. These are, of course, two different things. The Soviet regime, while embodying many traditional Russian features and now showing significant signs of evolution, is still the unique outstanding example of that nightmare of the twentieth century: the totalitarian state. This is, in certain respects, a new phenomenon in the inventory of political institutions. We do not yet fully know the laws of its development. Plainly, the edifice of Soviet power is faced today with severe strains and crises. These can be observed in its internal structure, which has come to depend on the institution of a supreme and glorified leader but contains no formal provision for the method of his selection. They can also be observed in the satellite empire, where the nature of Soviet power has been thoroughly exposed, where its devices have worn thin, where it is harvesting the crop of hatred and rejection it sowed with such reckless arrogance some years ago, in defiance of the pleas and warning of the Western world.

It is our business neither to save Soviet power from its follies nor to confuse the issue by attempting to assert ourselves into its difficulties. If our own beliefs are sound, it will continue to suffer, as it is suffering today, by the effects of its own unsoundness—its incompatibility with the deepest human needs—and it will eventually earn the retribution it so justly deserves. It is important that this process be permitted to reveal itself with such vividness and clarity that for generations to come, and let us hope forever, men will not again be tempted to seek their political fortunes through the degradation of fellow men, forgetting that it is they themselves who are thereby most deeply degraded.

And as for the Soviet peoples, we can only stand aside, respectful of the ordeal they are undergoing, mindful of the real human sacrifices this has involved, careful not to bestow either praise or blame too quickly where we understand very little of what is going on, maintaining our readiness to be helpful to the extent that we can, when and if the opportunity ever develops. We must not underrate the human damage that has been done by 35 years of Bolshevism: the partial brutalization of the youth, the neglect of religious truth, the primitivization of political and social concept, the atrophying of the qualities of individual self-reliance and responsibility. If and when the Soviet peoples ever emerge from this long ordeal, we must not expect them to react like people who had never gone through it. In many ways, they will be in great need of forbearance and understand-

On the other hand, we must be careful not to approach them with an attitude of superiority and moral instruction. In their long and excruciating subjection to the power of human evil, they have unquestionably sounded depths of human experience beyond the ken or imagination of people in our world. Who knows whether, in the course of this ordeal, spiritual values have not been discovered—or rediscovered—of immense profundity, perhaps even essential to the healthy development of our own civilization? After all, we, too, face a crisis at this time in the adequacy of our own spiritual concepts to the strains of our industrial and urban civilization. Perhaps those who have passed through the purgatory of totalitarianism will have something to tell us that we could not have learned in any other way.

Looking at all these things together, I cannot resist the conviction that there is some great historical logic in the existence at this time of the phenomenon we call Soviet power and in the problem it poses for the world beyond its own borders. To the West it stands as an admonition of the necessity for internal unity and mutual tolerance and a reminder of the immense moral responsibility that rests upon us by virtue of our rise to political and economic ascendancy in advance of other portions of the modern world. To the East it stands as an enticement and a test of maturity: as the bearer of something the Eastern peoples must have the strength to reject if their long-coveted independence is to be more than a new disillusionment and failure. As for the Russian people themselves and the other peoples of the Soviet Union, I fear the measure of their tragedy is now beyond our imagination or comprehension. On the great plains of Russia and Siberia, a moral struggle is in progress so immense that it must, it seems to me, be either the final demonstration of civilization's failure or the breeding ground of new spiritual forces of wide historic significance.

the honesty and purpose of their work.

As far back as 1940, the ILGWU, in a resolution to the AFL convention in New Orleans, asked for action to clean out racketeering elements that were infiltrating the tradeunion movement. At that time, the AFL adopted a mild compromise which gave its Executive Council limited powers to act and left intact the autonomy of its affiliates.

Recent investigations of the New York waterfront have developed the more sensational aspects of this problem. Confronted with this development, the Council has taken bolder action against corruption and gangsterism in a significant departure that deserves our warmest congratulations. With this action, the Council proclaimed that corruption in any union injures all unions! The Council recognized that it has an obligation to the public as well as to the labor movement to eradicate this situation, irrespective of the traditional autonomy of its affiliates.

When we met in convention three years ago, we were still in the midst of a cold war. A few weeks after our adjournment, the shooting war was started in Korea by Moscow puppets. In the past few weeks, negotiations for an armistice there have been resumed.

In the Kremlin, the warlords have cut down on the number of insults against us. In the struggle over who is to succeed Stalin, they have to save some of these insults for use against each other. Good! But even to the small extent that their new tactics might make for lessening world tension, the democracies should meet them with new tactics of their own—with tactics which will strengthen the camp of freedom and peace.

We should never shut the door to negotiations. At the same time, we must also maintain our position—free from all appeasement. But in the negotiations with the Muscovites, we must not assume as settled and final any conquests the Kremlin made by.

military aggression, Communist subversion, Soviet armed intervention, or any combination of these methods.

We don't claim to be prophets. We don't boast of any special talent. We never went to a school for diplomats. But as democratic trade unionists, who deal with the everyday problems of making ends meet, of making life more worthwhile, we sense more quickly the danger of the totalitarian enemy. It is because we of the ILGWU have sort of instinctively, and yet clearly, sensed the dangers of totalitarianism to free labor that we and our parent body, the AFL, became the vanguard of free world labor's fight against Communist subversion and aggression. I need not remind you that we opposed and fought with equal energy the Nazi-Fascist Axis as the most dangerous threat to human liberty, decency and peace.

That is why in 1934, when we met in convention here in Chicago, we were the first union in this country to decide to raise a voluntary fund to fight Nazism and Fascism. We were condemned then as we are today for the moral and financial support we have been extending to help save the free democratic trade unions abroad. They did not scare us then. We defied them. We'll defy them again today.

That is why we and the AFL fought the so-called World Federation—of Trade Unions, a Moscowfront. That is why we never could or would provide a cover of respectability for the Communist disruptors masquerading as social reformers. That is why we have tried hard, and with some success, to convince the honest liberals that Communism is the worst enemy and the very opposite of true liberalism and that genuine liberals should be in the forefront of the fight against Communism.

We have been fighting Communism and Communists since 1918. In the mid-Twenties, this union fought for its very survival when it was a prime target of these subversives in the trade-union field. At that time, we stood almost alone. It wasn't fashionable to fight Communism then.

As one who has had personal experience for a great many years in fighting Communism, I feel that this fight cannot be conducted in the headlines. The self-proclaimed apostles of anti-Communism, who adopt Communist tactics in fighting Communism, merely defeat the very purpose of their campaign. They merely play into the hands of Moscow and its stooges by cheapening this fight and by making a political football out of the Communist issue. Theyonly help and do not hurt the totalitarian enemies of our society.

The tactic of dragging genuine anti-Communists before Congressional committees solely for sensational purposes or personal revenge makes a mockery of American ideals, defeats the very purpose of the investigations and renders invaluable aid to the enemy. I consider this as a repeat performance of the Martin Dies Anti-American Committee of 1938. They made themselves ridiculous before the American public and gave comfort to the Communists. The same thing is happening today in Washington.

The fight for freedom is more than a military contest: In that fight, free labor must play an important part. We have met the challenge of world Communism through the formation of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, to which all of free world labor has rallied. We have revitalized all of the International Trade Secretariats, through which the fight to preserve democratic trade unionism is strengthened.

We assemble here at a time when warfare is again being waged in the world, when the common people are again paying a heavy price in lives to preserve the flame of freedom. This is a time of great challenge, and we must be confident of our ability to meet the challenge.

The ILGWU has not and shall not lose its crusading spirit.

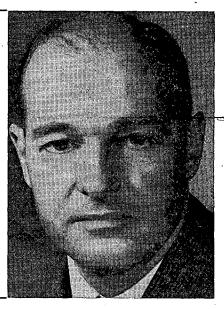

Materialism, conformity and intolerance — the seeds of totalitarianism — are all gaining ground among us, says a great liberal diplomat

THE TRIPLE THREAT

FROM WITHIN

By George F. Kennan

Woodrow Wilson once defined statesmanship as "the resolute and vigorous advance toward the realization of high, definite and consistent aims, which issue from the unreserved devotion of a strong intellect to the service of the state." Few men exemplify that definition so well as George F. Kennan, former State Department Counselor and Ambassador to Moscow. At the outbreak of World War II, he was interned in Nazi Germany; at the height of the cold war, he was expelled from Soviet Russia. In the intervening decade, he was a prime architect of American foreign policy. It was his dispatch from Moscow in 1945 (he was then First Secretary of our Embassy there) that most forcefully exposed the failure of appeasement. It was his article in Foreign Affairs in 1947 (written under the pseudonym, "Mr. X") that most convincingly formulated the Western program of resistance to Communism. We believe this address, delivered at the dedication of a new liberal-arts center at Notre Dame University, to be a comparable contribution to the preservation of a free world society.

The sense of warmth and reassurance that flows from this occasion means all the more to me because I cannot forget that there are forces at large in our society today that do not inspire me with this same feeling—quite the contrary. These forces are too diffuse to be described by their association with the name of any one man or any one political concept.

They have no distinct organizational forms. They are as yet largely matters of the mind and the emotion in large masses of individuals. But they all march, in one way or another, under the banner of an alarmed and exercised anti-Communism—but an anti-Communism of a quite special variety, bearing an air of excited discovery and proprietorship, as though no one had ever known before that there was a Communist danger; as though no one had ever thought about it and taken its measure; as though it had begun about the year 1945 and these people were the first to learn of it.

I have no quarrel to pick with the ostensible purpose of the people in whom these forces are manifest. Surely, many of them are sincere. Surely, many of them are good people. Surely, many of them have come to these views under real provocation and out of real bewilderment. But I have the deepest misgivings about the direction and effects of their efforts.

In general, I feel that what they are doing is unwise and unfortunate, and I am against it. They distort and exaggerate the dimensions of the problem with which they profess to deal. They confuse internal and external aspects of the Communist threat. They insist on portraying as contemporary realities things that had their actuality years ago. They insist on ascribing to the workings of domestic Communism evils and frustrations which, insofar as they were not part of the normal and unavoidable burden of complexity in our life, were the product of our behavior generally as a nation, and should today be the subject of humble and contrite soul-searching on the part of all of us, in a spirit of brotherhood and community, rather than of frantic and bitter recrimination.

And having thus incorrecty stated the problem, it is no wonder that these people constantly find the wrong answers. They tell us to remove our eyes from the constructive and positive purposes and to pursue with fanaticism the negative and vindictive ones. They sow timidity where there should be boldness; fear where there should be serenity; suspicion where there should be confidence and generosity. In this way they impel us—in the name of our salvation from the dangers of Communism—to many of the habits of thought and action which our Soviet adversaries, I am sure, would most like to see us adopt and which they have tried unsuccessfully over a period of some 35 years to graft upon us through the operations of their Communist party.

I would not mention these things if I felt that they were only my personal concern and had no relation to the undertaking which we have gathered today to celebrate. But I fear that there is here a serious relevance which we cannot ignore.

CAPITAL CAR LOT: 'WALLS OF SECULAR UNIFORMITY'

Thanks to the vision of wise and generous people, this university is now adding one more important unit to the number of those facilities in our country in which men can cultivate their own understanding, and extend the boundaries of knowledge, in the field of arts and letters. Certainly there could be no finer undertaking and none more needed. But I feel that this undertaking, too, will have to deal at some point with the forces I have just described—that by entering upon this undertaking you will eventually find that these forces will be your concern just as they have already become the concern of some of us who have walked in other branches of life.

I feel this first of all because these forces are narrowly exclusive in their approach to our world position, and carry this exclusiveness vigorously-into-the field of international cultural exchanges. They tend to stifle the interchange of cultural impulses that is vital to the progress of the intellectual and artistic life of our people. The people in question seem to feel either that cultural values are not important at all or that America has reached the apex of cultural achievement and no longer needs in any serious way the stimulus of normal contact with other peoples in the field of arts and letters.

They look with suspicion both on the sources of intellectual and artistic activity in this country and on impulses of this nature coming to us from abroad. The remote pasts of foreign artists and scholars are anxiously scanned before they are permitted to enter our land, and this is done in proceedings so inflexible in concept and offensive in execution that their very existence often constitutes a discouragement to cultural interchange. The personal movements and affairs of great scholars and artists are thus passed upon and controlled by people who have no inkling of understanding for the creative work these same scholars and artists perform.

In this way, we begin to draw about ourselves a cultural curtain similar in some respects to the Iron Curtain of our adversaries. In doing so, we tend to inflict upon ourselves a species of cultural isolation and provincialism wholly out of accord with the traditions of our nation and destined, if unchecked, to bring to our intellectual and artistic life the same sort of sterility from which the cultural world of our Communist adversaries is already suffering.

A second reason why I think you will have to concern yourselves with the forces to which I have pointed is that within the framework of our society, as in its relations to external environment, the tendency of these forces is exclusive and intolerant—quick to reject, slow to receive, intent on discovering what ought not to be rather than what ought to be.

They claim the right to define a certain area of our national life and cultural output as beyond the bounds of righteous approval. This definition is never effected by law or by constituted authority; it is effected by vague insinuation and suggestion. And the circle, as I say, tends to grow constantly narrower.

One has the impression that, if uncountered, these people would eventually narrow the area of political and cultural respectability to a point where it included only themselves, the excited accusers, and excluded everything and everybody not embraced in the profession of denunciation.

I recall reading recently, twice in one day, the words of individuals who proclaimed that if certain other people did not get up and join actively in the denunciation of Communists or Communism, they would themselves be suspect. What sort of arrogance is this? Every one of us has his civic obligations. Every one of us has his moral obligations to the principles of loyalty and decency. I am not condoning anyone for forgetting these obligations. But to go beyond this-to say that it is not enough to be a law-abiding citizen, to say that we all have some obligation to get up and make statements of this tenor or that with respect to other individuals, or else submit to being classified as suspect in the eyes of our fellow citizens—to assert this is to establish a new species of public ritual, to arrogate to one's individual self the powers of the spiritual and temporal lawgiver, to make the definition of social conduct a matter of fear in the face of vague and irregular forces, rather than a matter of confidence in the protecting discipline of conscience and the law.

I would know of no moral or political authority for this sort of thing. I tremble when I see this attempt to make a semi-religious cult out of emotional-political currents of the moment, and particularly when I note that these currents are ones exclusively negative in nature, designed to appeal only to men's capacity for hatred and and fear, never to their capacity for forgiveness and charity and understanding.

I have lived more than ten years of my life in totalitarian countries. I know where this sort of thing leads. I know it to be the most shocking and cynical disservice one can do to the credulity and to the spiritual equilibrium of one's fellow men.

And this sort of thing cannot fail to have its effect on the liberal arts, for it is associated with two things that stand in deepest conflict with the development of mind and spirit—with a crass materialism and anti-intellectualism on the one hand, and with a marked tendency toward a standardization and conformity on the other.

In these forces I have spoken about, it seems to me that I detect a conscious rejection and ridicule of intellectual effort and distinction. They come together here with a deep-seated weakness in the American character, a certain shy self-consciousness that tends to deny interests other than those of business, sport or war.

There is a powerful strain of our American cast of mind that has little use for the artist or the writer, and professes to see in the pursuits of such people a lack of virility—as though virility could not find expression in the creation of beauty, as though Michelangelo had never wielded his brush, as though Dante had never taken up his pen, as though the plays of Shakespeare were lacking in manliness.

The bearers of this neo-materialism seem, indeed, to have a strange self-consciousness about the subject of virility—a strange need to emphasize and demonstrate it by exhibitions of taciturnity, callousness, and physical aggressiveness—as though there were some anxiety lest, in the absence of these exhibitions, it might be found wanting.

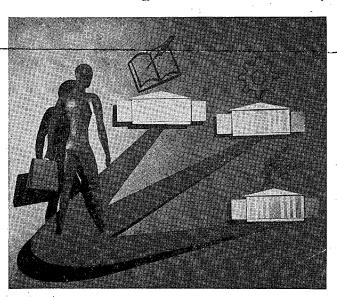

What weakness is it in us Americans that so often makes us embarrassed or afraid to indulge the gentle impulse, to seek the finer and rarer flavor, to admit frankly and without stammering apologies to an appreciation for the wonder of the poet's word and the miracle of the artist's brush, for all the beauty, in short, that has been recorded in the images of word and line created by the hands of men in past ages? What is it that makes us fear to acknowledge the greatness of other lands, or of other times, to shun the subtle and the unfamiliar?

What is it that causes us to huddle together, herdlike, in tastes and enthusiasms that represent only the common denominator of popular acquiescence, rather than to show ourselves receptive to the tremendous flights of creative imagination of which the individual mind has shown itself capable? Is it that we are forgetful of the true sources of our moral strength, afraid of ourselves, afraid to look into the chaos of our own breasts, afraid of the bright, penetrating light of the great teachers?

This fear of the untypical, this quest for security within the walls of secular uniformity—there are traits of our national character we would do well to beware of and to examine for their origins. They receive much encouragement these days, much automatic and unintended encouragement, by virtue of the growing standardization of the cultural and, in many respects, the educational influences to which our people are being subjected.

The immense impact of commercial advertising and the mass media on our lives is—let us make no mistake about it—an impact that tends to encourage passivity, to encourage acquiescence and uniformity, to place handicaps on individual contemplativeness and creativeness.

It may not seem to many of us too dangerous that we should all live, dress, eat, hear and read substantially alike. But we forget how easily this uniformity of thought and habit can be exploited when the will to exploit it is there. We forget how easily it can slip over into the domination of our spiritual and political lives by selfappointed custodians who contrive to set themselves at the head of popular emotional currents.

There is a real and urgent-danger here-for-anyone who values the right to differ from others in any manner whatsoever, be it in his interests or his associations or his faith. There is no greater mistake we of this generation can make than to imagine that the tendencies which in other countries have led to the nightmare of totalitarianism will, as they appear in our own midst, politely pause—out of some delicate respect for American tradition—at the point where they would begin to affect our independence of mind and belief.

The forces of intolerance and political demagoguery are greedy forces, and unrestrained. There is no limit to their ambitions or their impudence. They contain within themselves no mechanism of self-control. Like the ills of Pandora's box, once released, they can be stopped only by forces external to themselves.

It is for these reasons that I feel that you, in setting up at this time within this great academic community a center for liberal arts, are taking upon yourselves a great, though honorable, burden. You are going to have to swim against the tide of many of the things I have been talking about.

You are frequently going to find arrayed against you, whether by intent or otherwise, the materialists, the antiintellectuals, the chauvinists of all sizes and descriptions, the protagonists of violence and suspicion and intolerance, the people who take it upon themselves to delimit the operation of the principle of Christian charity, the people from whose memories there has passed the recollection that in their Father's house there are many mansions.

What you do in these walls will often be unsettling and displeasing to such people. They will view it with jealousy. You will have to bear their malice and their misrepresentation. But, unlike what many of them profess to wish to do to their own chosen enemies, it will be your task not to destroy them but to help in their redemption and remaking, to open their eyes, to demonstrate to them the sterility and hopelessness of negative undertakings, to engender in them an awareness of the real glories and the real horizons of the human spirit.

In this lies both the duty and the opportunity of the devotees of the liberal arts within our contemporary American civilization. It lies with them to combat the standardization of our day; to teach people to accept the great richness of the human mind and fantasy—to welcome it and to rejoice in it, happy that we have not been condemned by nature to a joyless monotony of the creative faculty, happy that there are so many marvelous ways in which the longings and dreams of men can find expression.

It lies with the devotees of the liberal arts to combat the materialism of our time; to teach us how to ride to work in a motor vehicle and absorb the canned music of the advertisers without forgetting that there is also a music of the spheres, to force us to remember that all the manifestations of our material prowess, impressive as they seem, are nevertheless only impermanent auxiliaries to our existence:

That the only permanent thing behind them all is still the naked, vulnerable human soul, the scene of the age-old battle between good and evil, assailed with weakness and imperfections, always in need of help and support, and yet sometimes capable of such breathtaking impulses of faith and creative imagination.

Finally, it lies with the devotees of the liberal arts to combat the forces of intolerance in our society, to convince people that these forces are incompatible with the flowering of the human spirit, to remember that the ultimate judgments of good and evil are not ours to make, that the wrath of man against his fellow man must always be tempered by the recollection of his weakness and fallibility and by the example of forgiveness and redemption which is the essence of his Christian heritage.

Korean POWs Are Test for Eisenhower

CHAMBERLIN

THE ISSUE responsible for the long deadlock in the Korean truce negotiations is no mere detail, susceptible of compromise, but an issue of fundamental moral and political consequence. It is the very sort of issue on which our representatives surrendered, with disastrous results, at Yalta. The issue at Panmunjom is whether anti-Communist Chinese and Korean prisoners, through raw force or equally potent pressure of an indirect nature, shall be surrendered against their own will to Communist slavery, torture or execution.

There are about 50,000 such prisoners—some 35,000 North Koreans, the rest Chinese. Many of them surrendered in response to UN leaflets promising refuge and humane treatment. To hand them back now would be a sorry breach of faith, a grave blot on American honor. There must be no Far Eastern Yalta, no matter how strong the pressure may be from countries which have made, at best, token contributions to resisting aggression in Korea. India's Prime Minister Nehru achieved a fitting climax to his long record of misguided appeasement of the Communist aggression by publicly declaring that he preferred the latest Commu-/ nist repatriation plan to the Amer ican counter-plan, which includes minimum safeguards for the prisoners.

When the original blunt Communist demand for forcible repatriation was too raw for Great Britain and even India to accept, India last December brought in a "compromise" scheme which was full of dangerous loopholes. The United States, very unwisely, accepted the Indian resolution, but the new administration actually has little reason to feel bound by this acceptance.

Finding it impossible to obtain forcible return outright, the Communists are now trying to obtain the same result by subtler methods. The new Communist plan, which received the hasty blessing of Sir Winston Churchill and Prime Minister Nehru, is full of dangerous features.

The anti-Communist prisoners are to be turned over to a "neutral" commission, composed of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Sweden, Switzerland and India. This commission is outrageously stacked—it includes two Soviet puppet # dictatorships, two genuine neutrals and India, which has forfeited/its right to be considered neutral by virtue of Nehru's announced approval of the Communist position. Red Chinese agents are to work on the prisoners for four months, and itis proposed that Polish and Czech Red military contingents take part in guarding them; it is easy to foresee the pressure to which this combination would lead. Those prisoners who hold out against threats are not to be set free even after the four-month period of "persuasion." Their fate is to be left to a political conference which would be no more likely to reach agreement than the Panmunjom negotiators have been.

The American plan (which, at this writing, seems about to be watered down as the result of pressure from our weak-willed allies) accepts the five-nation commission but tries to establish certain safeguards for the prisoners. The North Korean prisoners are to be freed as soon as an armistice is signed. The emissaries from Red China are to be given only two months to work on the prisoners, at the end of which time those who are still unwilling are to be set free. And only Indian troops are to be admitted to Korea for guard duty. This counter-plan should be America's last word.

As this writer and other contributors to THE NEW LEADER have suggested, the proper solution to the anti-Communist prisoner question is to release these men immediately and unconditionally. It has been argued that this would adversely affect the fate of UN prisoners. This seems most improbable. If the enemy really wants a truce, the release of our men in enemy hands would be hastened by the liberation of the anti-Communist prisoners; why should Red China and North Korea continue a war for the sole purpose of reclaiming prisoners who had been scattered to the four winds? Our own holding of the prisoners creates the temptation for the Communists to bargain and delay. On the other hand, if the enemy does not want a truce, there would be no prospect of the release of our men anyway.

I believe that, if the Eisenhower Administration releases the anti-Communist prisoners, the spontaneous cheer that greets any brave and just act would go up from one end of America to the other. The Peking radio would scream, Nehru would shake his head, the New Statesman would wring its hands; but we should be able to bear this with equanimity. President Eisenhower has the reputation of being a man who means what he says. Not long ago, he said: "We shall never acquiesce in the enslavement of any people in order to purchase fancied gain for ourselves." That principle will be nobly saved or meanly lost, depending on how we settle the fate of the Chinese and Korean anti-Communist refugees.

Dear Mr. Hoover:

As you may know. I retired from the Foreign Service at the end of July and have returned to the Institute for Advanced Study, where I am doing some writing and research.

I still continue to function from time to time so a consultant to the Government, on Soviet affairs. For this reason I find it necessary to try to keep up my own files of information on Soviet personalities and personnel changes, and for this I require up to date files of at least one of the Soviet daily papers. Unless, therefore, you would know of some reason why this would be undesirable or inwise, I propose to enter a personal subscription to the Roscow PRAVDE, through the Four-Continent E ok Store in New York, which I understand handles such subscriptions.

I would much appreciate it if record might be me e in your files of these circumstances and notification given. If necessary, to the postal authorities to the effect that the entry of this cubscription and the reasons therefor are known to the Government.

I am not corresin whether the Bureau in the prepar channel for this request and if not I would appreciate any indication you could give me of the other I one to take to prevent michaelestanding.

Containment Policy for Russia Diplomatic Talk, Kennan Claims Mr. Harbo _____

By R. H. SHACKFORD Scripps-Howard Staff Writer

George F. Kennan, former U.S. Ambassador to Soviet Russia, said today his controversial "containment" policy was primarily aimed at getting the United States to stop giving away things to the Soviets "for nothing."

It was a guide for diplomatic rather than military policy, contrary to wide interpretation at the time,

Mr. Kennan's explanation of what was in his mind when he proposed containment" of Russia is published today in the current issue of "The Progressive" magazine. It dis-closes that the article suggesting "containment" was written in 1946, but not published until July, 1947, in "Foreign Affairs" quarterly quarterlÿ. under the pseudonym of "Mr. X."

The containment policy was an issue in the 1952 presidential campaign. John Foster Dulles, now Secretary of State, took the position that it was a negative policy and proposed instead a positive course designed to eventually liberate the communist satellites.

"When I used the term 'contain-ment,' in an article written in 1946," Mr. Kennan said, "I did not think of It primarily in military terms . . . I did not suspect the Soviet leaders of any desire or intention to launch aggressive military actions across international prontiers in the foreseeable future.

"What I was concerned for was that the western powers should not give up anything more in the dip-lomatic sense—for nothing; and that we Americans, in particular, should not stand idly by and see any further peoples succumb to their own communist minorities simply for lack of some sort of temporary support from us that would be within the bounds of propriety and of our own resources."

DOCTRINE

A few months after wire Kennan wrote the article, but before it was published, the Truman Doctrine was proclaimed in Greece and Turkeya doctrine promising aid to any nation resisting communist subversion.

Mr. Kennan said the Marshall Plan was entirely in accord with his concept and the Atlantic Pact. "partly so."

Mr. Kennan's belated explanation of his "containment" policy was in reply to a pamphlet recently pub-lished by the American Friends Service Committee—an exposition of the pacifist view to which Mr

Kennan took strong exception.

"The friends appear to believe that the Soviet-American conflict came into existence only in 1945," he wrote, "and . . that Soviet-American differences were only the product of misunderstanding."

Mr. Kennan doesn't indicate any great hope that the new look in the Kremlin will bring any early fun-damental changes in Russia.

PROCESS

"It is 40 years since the communists came to power in Russia," he said. "The original revolutionary generation has almost died out. Both theory and practice are now undergoing that process of mellowing that has overtaken, sooner or later, all great human antagonisms."

Mr. Kennan believes there is something more dangerous than theoretical antagonisms in Soviet-American relations." That, he said, was the destruction of German and Japanese power thruout great areas, of the world in World War II "before there was any agreement as to what should replace it."

"Here is the basic question of the "Here is the basic question of the Soviet-American conflict: Who shall have dominant influence over the military resources of the areas formerly under the control of Germans and Japanese? Solve that question to the general satisfaction of both sides, and more will have been accomplished than by all the aid programs together to cause aid programs together to cause Soviet American tension to take its place alongside the many historical antagonisms which—once the source of dangerous and dramatic conflict -now cause no loss of sleep to the friends of peace."

Mr. Kennan did not explain how he thought the German and Japanese problems could be settled to the satisfaction of both sides.

According to George Kennan, former U. S. Ambassador Mr. Nease Mr. Winterrow Tele, Room to Moscow, much of the difficulty of the United States Mr. Helloman Hiss Gapdy. comes from fixed attitutes toward other nations, attitudes which are wrong and antithetical to United States long-term interests. Kennan believes that the United States, while recognizing its differences from the Russians, should look upon the recent changes in Soviet policy with hope that a satisfactory relationship can be established. The United States should accept the Soviet satellite situation, hoping only for the satellites' greater independence and greater responsiveness to domestic opinion. The outlook for U.S. - China relations is less promising because of the way China has insulted us, but the United States should not try to obstruct China's admission into the United Nations if a o majority of the United Nations want Peiping. Germany should be united as fast as possible .- The United States should not be terrorized by the threat of underdeveloped countries to go Communist if American aid is not forthcoming. On the other hand, we should not require gratitude from the countries we aid.

What are the paragraph Ift charter which you consider as yet unsatisfactory? Mainly the ragraph regarding the composition of the Council of Directors, which does not provide for representation of the Chinese Reopla's Republic. The Soviet delegation repeatedly proposed at the conference the Chinese People's Republic be included in the Directors' Council as a country which produces the initial raw materials and provides technical and. These proposals were turned down, and the Soviet delegation was compelled to state that it would raise this question at the New York conference in December (as broadcast -- Ed.) The exclusion of such a great Asian power as the Chinese People's Republic from the Council of Directors violates the principle of fair political and geographical representation of countries in the Council of Directors and would have an unfavorable effect on the work of the Council as a whole.

The last question asked Professor Uralov was: What is your opinion of the Washington conference as a whole and the Soviet stand at the conference? The conference showed, said Professor Walov, that, having good will and mutual understanding, considerable improvement can be made in the international agency charter on atomic energy which would promote international cooperation in a highly important field, namely the utilization of atomic energy for peaceful pruposes.

However, I believe that the draft charter, as I have already said, can stand improvement. It should be formulated in keeping with the established principles of international cooperation on which the U.N. charter and other international organizations are founded. There must not be anything in the charter which does not correspond to the principles of state sovereignty.

The Soviet Union, being sincerely for complete prohibition of atomic, hydrogen, and other weapons of mass annihilation, and being a leading country in the peaceful use of atomic energy, advocates the establishment of an international agency on atomic energy. Evidence is the Soviet Government decision to contribute a given quantity of fissionable materials to the international fund of atomic materials of the international agency as soon as it is agreed to set up such an agency.

KENNAN URGES WIDER U.S.-USSR CONTACTS

Mpscow, Soviet Home Service, May 18, 1956, 1600 GMT--L (Text)

New York-The former U.S. Ambassador to the Soviet Union, George Kennan, supported an expansion of cultural ties between the Soviet Union and the United States at a meeting of the Council of the Museum of Contemporary Art in New York. Kennan stressed in this connection that "cultural activities by foreigners on our territory must be surrounded by hospitality, good will, and attention."

CONTAINE

Kennan continued: "Our Government could, of the properties in this respect. Maybe these words will reach it. Foreign artists make their first acquaintance with American hospitality when they apply to American representatives abroad for visas. It is quite evident that this rarely occurs without unpleasantnesses and I would again like to raise the question of whether it is really necessary that this should be so, and whether really such a great country like ours is unable to take steps to insure that such visitors and other persons receive their visas quietly as is seemly in a civilized society. I would like to raise the question whether we really cannot do anything else but take their firgerprints like we do with criminals."

Such a situation, Kennan continued, hampers the development of cultural ties between the U.S. and other countries and inflicts harm on culture in general and on American cultural life in particular. It makes the organization of scientific and cultural meetings in the United States so difficult that "many people with good intentions are afraid to propose them and abstain from them as far as possible."

Kennan said that there is a tendency in the United States "to regard its cultural life with indifference. We, for instance, spend millions of dollars every year on horse-racing and games of chance but have no opera in our capital."

"I know of few countries," he stressed, "where the painter, writer, composer or thinker is respected so little as in our country."

Comment on Exchanges

Moscow, in English to North America, May 18, 1956, 2315 GMT--E

(Commentary on USSR desire for tourist and other exchanges with the U.S.)
(Text)

Here now is a brief commentary: There is a saying current in our country today that I think is a good one, writes our commentator. It goes like this: Peace rests on human friendship. The better friends people are, the more durable is peace, for there is more trust and understanding of each other. I often recall this simple truth these days, when so many prominent Americans and ordinary American citizens are urging better cultural and other relations between our countries.

American students, farmers, businessmen, and journalists are speaking out more frequently for broader contacts with our country; and it is very pleasant to know George Kennan, who used to be America's Ambassador to the Soviet Union, is also of the same opinion. I have in mind what he said yesterday at a meeting of the International Council of the Modern Art Museum in New York, when he urged that cultural contacts between the United States and the Soviet Union should be expanded to the limit. Kennan criticized those in the United States who continue to obstruct such contacts.

KENNANLAN

REVISITED

By Benjamin H. Brown (First of two articles)

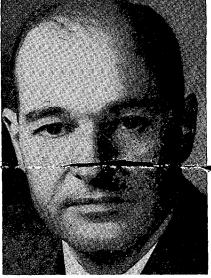

NYONE WHO FINDS FAULT with George Kennan's Aviews, as I shall have occasion to do in these articles, should start, I think, by acknowledging the debt this country owes him. Kennan's understanding of the Soviet threat has helped us measure, and go far toward mastering, an unprecedented challenge to our way of life. His dogged insistence that diplomacy is a game of power, not platitude, helped puncture a dangerous illusion of American statesmanship. The containment destrine im: plying coalition and cooperation with other free peoples, supplied the master strategic concept for resistance to Soviet expansion.

These ideas underlie many of the foreign policy enactments of two administrations. The credit must of course be widely shared. But much of it belongs to Kennan, and not a little to other former members of the State Department's Policy Planning Staff, which Kennan organized in 1947. Recent books by three alumni of this remarkable group—Dorothy Fosdick, Louis Halle and Charles Burton Marshall-are valuable supplements to the basic Kennan texts.*

For all this, there are serious shortcomings in the Benjamin H. Brown (cut at right) was recently appointed Director of Cleveland's Council on-World Affairs. A former Deputy Secretary General of the U.S. Mission to the United Nations, he has also served on the history faculty of Columbia University. He is co-author with Joseph E. Johnstone of The U.S. and the UN, and was editor of The U.S. Stake in the UN.

Kennan approach. First, he rates too low, in my opinion, the likelihood that Americans in their present mood can adequately respond to the growing demands of their position of world leadership. This makes him an unreliable guide for the high ground beyond containment, where the victories of the cold war will be consolidated or wasted.

Second, Kennan's "conceptual framework," as he calls it contains inadequate safeguards against the use of American power for short-term advantage at the expense of long-term objectives. To some extent, this deficiency is made good by Kennan's former colleagues. I shall deal fully with this matter in another article.

A third limitation arises from Kennan's strong attachment to the forms and procedures of traditional diplomatic intercourse; these are linked in his mind with realism and power. He has a corresponding mistrust of the UN and other forms of international organization; these are linked in his mind with legalistic and moralistic policies that ignore the realities of power. The confusion of form and substance limits the usefulness of Kennan's analysis at precisely the point where his keen insights might be of greatest value for the policy-making of the future.

Let us pick up the thread of Kennan's argument and see where it is apt to lead, for better or worse, in the period-ahead.

IGHT YEARS AGO, as the not-so-mysterious "Mr. X," Kennan unveiled the containment theory for the readers of Foreign Affairs. Despite the claims of its critics, it was not purely a defensive doctrine. For behind the idea of "unalterable counterforce" lay the notion that the United States, by increasing the strains under which Soviet policy operates, could force upon the Kremlin a greater degree of moderation and circumspection-and in this way "promote tendencies which must eventually find their outlet in either the break-up or the gradual mellowing of Soviet power." Kennan suggested that we might begin to see evidence of such a turn of events if we could frustrate Soviet expansion for ten or fifteen years.

Kennan's prediction rested on a prescient analysis of Soviet internal weakness, on a shining faith in the greatness of the Russian people, on a tough humanistic conviction that there can be a statistic that lives by man's debasement, and on his cool appraisal of the Kremlin's leaders. The latter, in his opinion, were odious but thoroughly realistic. Their deep hostility toward us could not be charmed away. On the other hand, they had no desire for a general war and would have no qualms about backing up before superior force, if we left them a way to do so without loss of vital prestige.

The hard question for Kennan—assuming the United States did the right things—was not whether desirable changes would in time come about and largely through the efforts of the Russian people themselves, but whether these changes would come about by the mellowing or violent overthrow of the regime. He did not prejudge this question and, so far as I know, he is still open-minded about it.

But, by 1954, Kennan seemed to detect a hopeful quickening of the pace. "There is a change in process today from Stalinism to something else," he wrote, "and the fact that this 'something else' is not fully clear to us is not a proof that it does not exist, or that it will not be something closer to the requirements of international stability than what we have known hitherto in the Soviet system."

How are we to tell if the "something else" that we perceive in Russia today is really closer—or moving closer—to the requirements of international stability? First, we need to have a clear image of the kind of Russia that we can live with in a fair degree of tranquility. Equally important, we must know the practical limits beyond which we cannot or should not, in our own interest, go in claiming the right to concern ourselves with Russian developments.

Kennan gives good advice on both points. It is elementary that Russian national interests will continue to exist and to be asserted by any Russian government worthy of the name. Moreover, Kennan adds, many teatures of the Soviet system will stick—and some will deserve to, for no system that lasts decades can lack merit altogether.

If we cast off the illusion of American omnipotence and if we measure carefully our true interest in Russia, we shall understand, Kennan argues, that what genuinely concerns us and what a wise American foreign policy may be able to influence is the personality of Russia as an actor on the world stage. This has little to do with internal affairs. These become relevant to our concerns, Kennan asserts, only when they affect the stability of international life.

Thus, in 1951, Kennan listed three changes that the United States, as a responsible member of the world community, was entitled to look for in Russia:

First, that the Iron Curtain be forever lifted, so that Russian relations with the rest of the world could be conducted in a sane and moderate atmosphere.

Second, that the exercise of internal authority "stop short of that fairly plain line beyond which lies totalitarianism." This would mean, for example, the abandonment of a system of slave labor—not so much because slavery is repugnant to us, but because it requires coercion on such a scale that the lowering of an Iron Curtain and the invention of foreign enemies follow almost automatically. Such excess of internal authority in a great country over a long period easily becomes a hazard to world peace and is thus a legitimate concern of the world community.

Third, we are entitled to look for an end to Russian imperialist expansion and oppression. Kennan recognizes that this is a difficult subject, involving among others neighboring non-Russian peoples whose economic existence is closely tied to that of the Great Russians. Our legitimate opposition to imperialistic oppression should not blind us to the requirements of these special cases.

These, then, are the criteria that Kennan would use in determining whether the Russian "New Look" is a matter of appearance of substance. They will not appeal to wishful thinkers who see the mellowing of Soviet power in Khrushchev's outgoing manner. Nor will they appear to hot-blooded romantics who dream of rolling Russia back to her prewar frontiers and of establishing a liberal democracy in Moscow. But, as Kennan would say, wishful thinking and counsels of romantic perfection have no place in international affairs. "Here other criteria, sadder, more limited, more practical, must be allowed to prevail." If there was any doubt of the essential truth of this in pre-atomic days, surely there is none in 1955.

TF KENNAN IS RIGHT, the Kremlin's leaders have no timetables of military conquest. Their major design, he wrote last year, is to divide the non-Communist world by exploiting its supposed internal contradictions and thus to hasten its "inevitable" decline.

The corollary is that our major design must be to unite and strengthen the free world. Thus, assuming we maintain an adequate defense posture, the things we most need to do to prevent further Soviet expansion are "things we must do in our relations with the peoples of the non-Communist world."

This is the heart of the containment theory and the informing idea of the mid-century Pax Americana. It is reflected in the Greek-Turkish program, the Marshall Plan, Point Four, NATO, and our world-wide system of alliances and aid agreements. The work of containment may be far from done, but it is far enough along to suggest the expediency of looking ahead. What lies beyond? And how shall we shape our actions to insure that we move in the right direction?

Kennan's view is that, in the long run, America "will not solve the problems of its developing world relationships except on the basis of a readiness to go in for an extensive merging of its life with that of other peoples." This is not World Government, and it is not Union Now, he hastens to add. We must start cautiously, "tackling first the problem of our relationship with peoples nearest and closest to us." What this really means is that we should not start at all; for in Kennan's opinion we are not yet ready, we are not yet worthy to begin, even in the smallest way, the great task that lies before us.

We Americans have come upon evil days, he writes. Hypnotized by the banalities of the mass media, mouthing the cliches of an outdated national myth, suspicious and afraid of other peoples and ourselves, we live in a wasteland of gadgets and violence, of filthy city streets and juvenile delinquency. Since we have not mastered ourselves, we cannot hope to lead the world. If we go about talking of international mergers, the prospects of intimacy with us will only frighten other people away. The problem must wait while we do something about "our own inner American selves and the state of our national soul."

When the good angel speaks to us, and when we have put-our-house in order, our lives will be more interesting-meaning the and see shall have some shiping nemessage for the peoples of the world.

Until that great day comes, Kennan seems to say, we should venture little and trust that events do not pass us by. We should cling to the diplomatic forms that served our forefathers in the nineteenth century. We should beware the pitfalls of multilateral organizations. We should honor the UN but do nothing to strengthen it. As a great nation commanding a large portion of the world's wealth and military power, we have a heavy responsibility that rests squarely on us. We cannot evade it or spread it extensively "by always contriving to appear in the company of an international majority."

I am not a Rotarian booster and I am not for World Government Now, but I find Kennan's judgments a trifle harsh. There are many symptoms of illness in American society. Nevertheless, this nation has risen to its new international responsibilities with alacrity, courage and generosity. We now lead a world-wide coalition of nations—a mighty force that has made a good start toward developing what Kennan calls, in another connection, the "positive and constructive purposes that serve to place the negative, destructive purposes of Communism in the shadows where they belong."

Our coalition has been created in part by the kind of diplomacy which Kennan admires, for which there is always a need. But it has also been created by the venturesomeness that in our best moments impels us to leap ahead of events and to experiment with new forms of organization that Kennan deplores.

One such leap into the future occurred when we answered the Communist challenge in Korea. In one stroke we improvised a new tool—a UN executive military authority—to enable our coalition to do, under the UN, what the original San Francisco machinery could not do. It was a great forward step. And while the fighting went on in Korea, we sought, through diplomatic channels and in UN debates, to perfect the new tool and to find new uses for it.

The opportunity was lost on Kennan. The thing that impressed him about Korea was, ironically, the same thing that impressed General MacArthur. As "the circle of military associates widens," Kennan wrote in 1950, ". . . the theoretical total of available military strength may increase, but only at the cost of compactness and ease of control." Korea only demonstrated that "joint military operations against an aggressor have a different meaning for each participant and raise specific political issues for each one which are extraneous to the action." This view is widely held now. We find it also in Louis Halle's book.

Kennan's view rests, it seems to me, on a deep and mischievous confusion that accounts for much of today's fashionable criticism of the notion of collective security. One of our problems in Korea arose from the insistence other UN members-notably India-that the UN Command limit its objectives to those appropriate to a police action and seek a negotiated peace on the basis of those objectives. This was not "extraneous" to the action in question, as Kennan suggests; it was basic. It was not the presence of an Indian ambulance unit in Korea or the participation of Indian delegates in UN debates that caused Nehru to claim and to be accorded the right to be heard. It was India's special interest in Asia and her general interest in world peace. Other nations also had legitimate interests, which had to be, asserted. UN or no UN. In the UN, they were asserted in an orderly way and a rough harmony was achieved. What we gained was not merely theoretical military strength, as Kennan suggests, but a warrant to proceed on behalf of the world community, with, incidentally, substantial material support from other members. If we had-sacrificed this for "ease of control," the advantage would=have-been illusory. For we would have risked the collapse of the UN and of our coalition, and our political difficulties would have been greater, not less.

Kennan argues in his latest book against involving in complex international problems large numbers of countries whose interests are only remotely affected and who cannot make appreciable contributions to the remedies that are adopted. But where are these unaffected countries? If they exist, then most of us, including Kennan, have misunderstood the nature of the Soviet threat. One of the chief problems of our diplomacy has been to help them see that they are affected. What is more, most of them have appreciable contributions to make toward world security. They have the power to grant or deny the use of strategic airbases, waterways, and raw materials. Even the weakest of them have the power, and may be tempted, as Kennan warns, to turn over the reins of government to elements taking orders from Moscow.

The logic of events is all against the notion that our coalition can or should be a limited-membership club. The world-wide Soviet menace has inspired the formation of a world-wide line of defense. The Rio Pact was followed by NATO, and NATO has grown to include Greece and Turkey and now Adenauer's Germany. We are linked by alliances and aid programs to the Middle East, Asia and the Pacific. What we call "coalition diplomacy" is really a way of dealing with the entire non-Soviet world, including traditional neutrals and the new species of neutralists. As Dorothy Fosdick suggests, strong neutrals are sometimes "as useful as allies; indeed, they may be more helpful than some outright allies."

The management of our world-wide coalition involves difficulties that will grow more acute in months to come. The free world is torn by deep and dangerous conflicts. It has grown in unity because of the special circumstances of the period through which we have been passing. The bi-polarization of world power has left most governments little room for maneuver. The Kremlin's hostility has been plain enough for most to see. The mounting importance of the UN, as long as it had serious United States support, fostered a growing sense of world community.

But now bi-polarity is passing: The Big_Four,_as_Walter Lippmann recently remarked, is giving way to the Big Eight. The Kremlin, still unmellowed so far as we know, is on its good behavior. Everyone is talking about a new era of diplomacy in which the UN will not figure in any important way. And yet, if we are right—if Kennan is right—about the nature of the Soviet danger, the need for solidarity will remain, particularly in an age of nuclear stalemate and limited wars. The "duel of infinite duration" may be only beginning.

In the long run, the vast and improbable congeries of interest known as the Free World is not defensible except as it becomes a cooperative order offering all loyal participating nations advantages that are worth defending from their point of view as well as from ours. This calls for increasing cooperation in the political, economic, social and cultural fields. Kennan is right: We cannot build such an order overnight; we cannot build it by ignoring the realities of power. But neither can we build it by sitting on our hands. We cannot take a long holiday from our international responsibilities while we do something about the state of our "national soul."

We have shown in these postwar years that we are not altogether unworthy of the leadership that history has thrust upon us. We have made a good beginning in the UN and elsewhere. We must continue on our journey. One wishes Kennan would not stand back and exhort us to slow down, but get out in front and help us find our way.

Background

Kennan was born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on February 16, 1904. He was graduated from Princeton University with an A.B. degree in 1925. Kennan entered the United States Consular Service in 1925, and later served in numerous American consulates and embassies throughout the world. In 1952 Kennan was named United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union. In October, 1952, Kennan was declared persona non grata by the Soviet Government and his recall was requested. Kennan retired from the State Department in July, 1953, and is currently associated with the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, New Jersey. Unfavorable Information

The Daily Worker, 5-2-56, east coast daily communist newspaper, page 2, stated that in a speech reportedly delivered on April 30, 1956, Kennan called for leadership which would "dispell the fears and misunderstandings that cause so many Americans to applaud the shocking miscarriage of justice and fairness in the Congressional investigations and loyalty hearings. We need a leadership that is much less afraid of men like Jenner and McCarthy. What was happening in Washington in the heyday of McCarthy still burns in my memory."

James Reston, New York Times correspondent, in an article appearing in the May 7, 1956, issue of that paper, stated that according to George Kennan, former Ambassador to Russia, much of the difficulty of the United States came from fixed attitudes towards other countries, attitudes which were wrong and antithetical to long-term United States interests. Kennan believes, according to Reston, that the United States while recognizing its differences with the Russians should look upon recent changes in Soviet policy with the hope that future relationships can be established. Kennan reportedly feels that the United States should accept the satellite situation. Kennan reportedly feels that United States-China relations are less promising

Mason, as an individual rather than as a result of his being a Naval officer, expressed concern that George Kennan, a former State Department official, has consistantly expressed ideas and positions not only favorable to the communists, but at such times as might indicate he had prior knowledge of actions to be taken by Russia. Declared persona non-grata by Russia in 1952. Retired from State Department in 1943 and according to Who's Who in America, 1956-1957, is associated with Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, New Jersey. In May 7, 1956, issue of "New York Times," Kennan quoted as stating much of U.S. difficulty results from fixed attitudes toward other countries and that U.S., while recognizing differences with Russians, should look upon recent changes in Soviet policy with hope that future relationships can be established. Article reported he feels U.S. should accept satellite # situation. Also that U.S. should not try to obstruct Red China's admission into the UN if a majority wants to admit Red China. Director noted in connection with-this article "I am amazed at the way Kennan has fallen for the Soviet line. H."

While Kennan's statements and positions have appeared to be in favor of Russia and U.S. getting along with Russia, we have not made investigation of him and have no basis for an investigation at this time.

Dear Mr. Hoover:

DATE 10-38-18 BY SP4 BURIDAN

This is just a suggestion, as I haven't any real evidence at hand—but I wonder if anyone has thought of investigating the sources of the remarkable advice which George Kennan, the former State Department official who is currently said to be our greatest expert on Russia, is passing out to citizens of the free world (and particularly its intellectuals) via the mass communication media?

I thought of this in connection with an editorial in our local paper about Kennan's latest BBC broadcast to the people who will shortly be asked to choose between MacMillan's government and Bevan's party,—in which Mr. Kennan recommended (1) withdrawal of American forces from Europe, (2) unilateral NATO action to end the atomic arms race. It struck me how accurately placed in space and time Mr. Kennan's mass-communication efforts are relative to weaknesses in the free and totalitarian systems, and how consistently they serve to weaken the free world and strengthen the slave.

Thus in 1947, when Stalin's Eastern Europe grabs had Washington in a mood dangerously near to vigorous retaliation, Kennan came out with the soothing "Mr. X" article, which assured America that we could have our cake and eat it, too—avoid a war, yet see our most dangerous and aggressive enemy collapse from his own internal conflicts. At this time, there was already a sizeable body of skeptics who pointed out that no police state had proved internally unstable, although all of them had been expected to be. Mr. Kennan's advice became the policy of "containment" which is the backbone of America's "cold war" strategy leven today.

In August, 1956, with the Middle-East situation growing increasingly urgent and dangerous, Mr. Kennan's name appeared over an article in HARPER'S magazine entitled "Needed Changes In Our Foreign Policy"—an article which urged that American's concentrate on creating Utopia at home and forget about the Communist menace abroad for ten years—after which, said Mr. Kennan, there would be plenty of time to deal with that menace, should it still exist. And in November, 1956, in the middle of the Budapest murder case Mr. Kennan co-authored another article entitled "The Soviet Can Never Recover" (with Joseph Alsop, who has since repudiated the sentiments therein, in public articles).* This article asserted that it was unnecessary for the U.S. to do anything positive about Communist imperialism since God was on Our Side and victory, therefore the U.S. to be a since of the U.S. to do anything positive about Communist imperialism since God was on Our Side and victory, therefore the U.S. to be a since of the U.S. to be anything positive about Communist imperialism since God was on Our Side and victory, therefore the U.S. to be a since of the U.S. to be a sin

Then on Nov. 10, almost as the Sputnik episode aroused the free world, here again was Mr. Kennan, this time on the BBC, telling Britain that there was no cause for alarm, that Victory for Our Side (through erosion of despotism gasain) is inevitable. And now, with Nye Bevan's Socialists becoming a serious competitor for the policy-making jobs in the British Empire, Mr. Kennan thas turned his rather formidable reputation to supporting exactly the policies which Bevan, almost alone among British thinkers and politicians, supports.

* Saturday Evening Post, about the first week in November, 1956

12-13, -57

There is nothing in any of this to prove Mr. Kennan is working for the Communists. On the contrary, opinions like his have formed the basis for the complacency of most free-world intellectuals (with a few exceptions like Raymond Aron and Strausz-Hupė), which complacency undoubtedly occasions the "vicious circle of public apathy and political silence" regarding present perils, as one critic writes it. But the importance of Mr. Kennan outweighs most of these others; his reputation overawes most critics; and his public pronouncements are exceedingly accurately timed—a timing that suggests a masterly strategy with almost a foreknowledge of political crises to come.

Articles like the HARPER'S and SATEVEPOST are not easy to time this well, although some allowance must be made for the choice of editors regarding the time of publication. The author does have the initiative, however, in seeing that the article is in the proper hands somewhat before the crisis arises—if he has the foreknowledge thus implied.

I do not wish to add to the climate of suspicion and back-stabbing which is undoubtedly fostered by such vague suggestions—yet the immense potentialities for harm which a Communist agent in such a position would have, and the very remarkable timing of these public debates, and the precedent of other agents previously discovered in unlikely places in the Government, seem to argue that in this case any increased suspicion and mistrust which might be occasioned is worth—while. I rather doubt that Mr. Kennan is such an agent—but I think he should be, if he has not already been, investigated with exceeding thoroughness.

To be sure, Communist affiliations so discovered would not necessarily be a legal crime—and perhaps such an investigation would be outside the legitimate mission of the Bureau. In that case, the proper agency to submit this suggestion seems to be a Congressional investigating committee. Please feel free to forward this communication to such a committee if you think it desireable.

MISCELLANEOUS INFO CONCERNING

On 1/10/58, Vice Admiral WALTER STRATTON ANDERSON (Retired), a former Director of Naval Intelligence, who resides at 1065 Lexington Avenue, NYC, called at this office and stated NY that he would like to have the Director know that he, ANDERSON, cannot understand the manner in which the above captioned individual, former Ambassador to Russia, is deporting himself.

ANDERSON stated that after KENNAN had been Ambassador to Russia for a short period of time, KENNAN traveled to Berlin where, in a public interview, he made some very derogatory state ments concerning Russia. ANDERSON described this as an action which was either very stupid since KENNAN was still Ambassador to Russia, or else was designed to have KENNAN declared persona non grata.

Since that time, ANDERSON states, he has observed the actions of KENNAN closely although he has no personal acquaintance ship with KENNAN. He referred to the current lectures which KENNAN is giving at Oxford University and to statements of KENNAN's which are contrary to the present policy of the U.S. As examples he cited KENNAN's proposals that Germany be made a neutral country and that the U.S. withdraw its troops from Germany. ANDERSON observed that these are points which Russia has been working for and that in his statements KENNAN is, in effect, giving aid and comfort to the enemy.

RECORDED 47 Admiral ANDERSON has a son, also named WALTER STRATTON ANDERSON, who is a career officer in the foreign service of the State Department and who is presently stationed at Oslo, Norway. Admiral ANDERSON has been forwarding to his son newspaper accounts of KENNAN's articles and lectures and his son has on two occasions also expressed wonderment at KENNAN's actions and has raised the question as to whether KENNAN is another HISS. Admiral ANDERSON stated he does not believe KENNAN should be classified as another HISS but reiterated he cannot understand KENNAN's actions and state. ments and wanted the Director to know of this information.

Kennan to Yugoslavia

THE return of George F. Kennan to Government service is a gain for the Government but a loss to the field of history. For several years he has been engaged in writing a comprehensive account of relations between the United States and Bolshevik Russia since the 1917 revolution.

One doesn't have to agree with all of Mr. Kennan's views to concede that he is a man of provocative ideas and a man of vast knowledge about and understanding of Russia, communism, and the current global power struggle.

President Kennedy's appointment of him to be Ambassador to Yugoslavia will place him in a very sensitive spotsensitive to the pullings and haulings that go on eternally within the international communist movement. Mr. Kennan will be able to discuss on equal terms with the Yugoslavs the intracommunist ideological struggle, which now embraces Red China, because he, too, is a long-time student of that stryggle.

Mr. Kennan was declared persona nongrata by the Soviets when he was ambassador there during the early days of the Eisenhower Administration. And then the unfortunate disagreement between Mr. Kennan and the late John Foster Dulles led to Mr. Kennan's departure from the Government at a time when the country needed all the experts and ideas on Soviet policies it could get.

Mr. Kennan is best known for his post-war containment policy of Russia which, despite some critics, still is the fundamental U.S. policy—to try to prevent the expansion of Societ influence anywhere else in the world.

One thing is certain: the State Department will welcome the flow of Kennan reports and dispatches from Belgrade. Over the years of his previous Government service the files are filled with extraordinarily lucid and perceptive reports from Moscow—some written during the World War II U. S.-USSR honeymoon. These predicted very accurately the intransigeant policy the Soviets were to pursue on the international stage after the war.

Senator Fulbright, (D) Arkansas, spoke concerning comments made by other congressmen regarding a statement by Mr. George Kennan, former Ambassador to Yugoslavia, in connection with congressional politics interfering with our foreign affairs and our foreign policy. Mr. Fulbright stated "I regret that anyone should criticize his efforts to enlighten the American people and Members of this body about our relations with Yugoslavia specifically, or Eastern Europe generally, or with the Kremlin. His views are deserving of great weight. I would certainly not say they were infallible, but there is no more thoughtful man or student of our relations with Eastern Europe and Russia in or out of government." Mr. Fulbright submitted an article from Look magazine for November 19th written by J. Robert Moskin and entitled "Our Foreign Policy Is Paralyzed." This article stated "How can the United States rid itself of the jellylike indecision that paralyzes our foreign policy? Kennan points to three alternatives: --- His second alternative is to modify our political system. 'Our form of Government is not well suited to making decisions. 'The reason for this, he says, is that 'power is too much fragmented in Washington, including the Congress, the Armed Forces, the FBI all the people who decide our national actions. "

ARTICLE ENTITLED "CONGRESSIONAL POLITICS

HURT FOREIGN POLICY, KENNAN SAYS" SUBJECT:

WASHINGTON SUNDAY STAR, 11/3/63

Re memo Jones to DeLoach dated 11/7/63. Referenced memo discussed an article by Bernard Gwertzman which appeared in "The Washington Star" on 11/3/63 dealing with the views on our foreign policy expressed by George Frost Kennan, former U. S. Ambassador to Yugoslavia. According to Gwertzman, Kennan said Congress is not the only body hampering foreign policy as there is also interference from other Government agencies. He allegedly singled out the Immigration Service and the FBI in the matter of passports, visas, and re-entry permits, saying personnel of these 2 agencies have acted in ways contrary to the policy of the State Department regarding Yugoslavia. Gwertzman has Kennan saying that "many of the people (in the Immigration Service and the FBI) were going on the assumption that Yugoslavia was a member of the Soviet bloc, a thesis contrary to our own observations and to the established analysis of the department.

Mr. Tolson suggested that we have someone talk to Kennan and straighten him out and the Director said. "Yes. Send someone from here. H."

In accordance with Mr. Tolson's instructions, I have made an appointment to discuss Ambassador Kennan's alleged statements with him at Princeton, New Jersey, on 11/15/63. I will furnish the results of our conversation promptly upon completion.

PROFESSOR GEORGE FROST KENNAN

PRINCETON UNIVERSITY

Mr. W. C. Sullivan

George 7. KennAN

I just completed a two and one-half hour discussion with Professor Kennan. He immediately told me of the great esteem in which he holds the Director and of his admiration for the work of the FBI. In view of this, he told me he was very distressed at the article in "Look" magazine which completely misquoted him relative to the FBI and national policy making. He voluntarily offerred to make a public statement correcting this, if the Director wanted it. He said he would write a letter to the Director and if this was not satisfactory he would go to Washington to discuss the matter with Mr. Hoover if this was desired.

In regard to Liaison activities and intelligence information on Yugoslavia, Professor Kennan said that when he was Ambassador to Yugoslavia he did experience a marked lack of information. explained to him that we disseminated regularly information to which he referred to the Department of State. Professor Kennan then said that the breakdown in Liaison must be within the Department of State and he might write to that Department about it.

Professor Kennan had no other observations to make about the work of the FBI other than to say that he has always regarded the work of the FBI with great admiration and was well aware of our efficiency.

Professor Kennan was very friendly throughout, seemed to be sincerely concerned over what was published. He said he never did have absopportunity to read the article in "Look" before it was published and he would not be caught this way again.

He asked me to extend his warmest personal regards to Mr. Hoover. I assured him I would do this.

Further details in regard to this discussion will be submitted on my return to the Seat of Government.

Dear Mr. Hoover:

I am writing to tell you how deeply I appreciated the courtesy of Mr. Sullivan's visit, and particularly the tactful and understanding manner in which listened to what I had to say. It is really I who should have paid the visit to the Bureau; for the way in which the statement appeared was definitely misleading and unfair to the Bureau, and I owe an apology to yourself and to the Bureau as a whole. Whether I actually said what was attributed to me in the LOOK article, I do not know; I had no opportunity to see the text of the interview before it appeared; and I kept no record of the long discussions I had with Mr. Moskin last August, from which the article was culled. But it was my responsibility to see that misimpressions of this nature were not conveyed; and I am heartily sorry that I did not meet this responsibility more effectively and that the Bureau, in particular, for which I have always had greatest respect, was the victim.

I hope that you and your associates will continue to think of me as a friend of the Bureau and an admirer of its work, and that your staff will continue to call on me in instances where I can be of some small help.

Captioned book, just published by Harper & Row, New York, consists of lectures written and delivered by George F. Kennan following his return to the United States after two years (1961-1963) as American Ambassador to Yugoslavia. 62-81548-

No Choice but Peaceful Coexistence

Kennan expresses misgivings about any concept which envisages the overthrow of Soviet power either by the direct use of armed force or by the incitement of communist-bloc peoples to revolt. He holds that vast and far-reaching changes have occurred in the Soviet Union since Stalin's day, and that important political changes will continue in that country, but only on the foundation of and within the changes will continue in that country, but only on the foundation of and within the framework of the present political system, which is now firmly established. He sees the gradual evolution of the Soviet Union as offering hope that it may someday assume an acceptable place in the community of nations. While Kennan says he is no advocate of "spineless pacifism," he feels the West has no choice but to accept the quest for peaceful coexistence as the basis for its policy toward communist countries.

East-West Trade Aids Peace

Kennan takes a dim view of a policy designed to discourage trade between the Soviet bloc and the West as a means of impeding the military-industrial development of the Soviet Union. On the contrary, he maintains that increased East-West trade would encourage the development of a healthy and economic independence within the Soviet bloc. Trade would help the Eastern European satellites to achieve a measure of independence and flexibility in their foreign economic relations. But Kennan warns that to demand political concessions as a quid pro quo for normal commercial transactions is only another way of renouncing trade altogether, for communist countries will never yield to such demands.

Shattered Communist-Bloc Unity

Kennan recognizes the disintegration of the extreme concentration of power in Moscow which characterized the communist bloc in the immediate postwar period, and the emergence in its place of a plurality of independent or partially independent centers of political authority, which has been termed polycentrism. What was once a unified and disciplined bloc has deteriorated into something more like an uneasy alliance between two ideologically similar commonwealths: one grouped around the Soviet Union, the other around Red China. Kennan foresees the possibility of some armed conflicts along the Sino-Soviet border, although he doubts their escalation into a full-scale war between the two nations.

East-West Dilemmas

Both the communist world and the free world are confronted with serious dilemmas, Kennan points out. The communist bloc faces the basic question of whether to conceive of the world in terms of an irreconcilable and deadly struggle which can only be solved through war (the Chinese view), or whether to recognize that communism can be advanced by more sophisticated, more gradual, and more peaceful ways (the Soviet view).

The West is confronted by a fundamental problem of whether to promote a trend toward further polycentrism in the hope that there might prove to be a portion of the communist world with which we could contrive to live, or whether to discourage that trend on the theory that a differentiation of outlook and authority among communist powers does not materially affect their status as a threat to the West's security.

George F. Kennan

Kennan is a well-known author and is considered an "expert" on Russia and communism by reason of his long foreign service career. He is a man of varied and strong convictions. Some of the controversial positions he has taken include the postwar containment policy of preventing further Soviet expansion, admission of Red China to the United Nations, withdrawal of all Allied troops from Europe, and denial of missiles to North Atlantic Treaty Organization nations.

Kennan testified in the J. Robert Oppenheimer hearings that Oppenheimer had a great mind and had given him intelligent advice while Kennan was in the State Department. During the FBI investigation of Kennan for his post as Ambassador to Yugoslavia, three individuals interviewed considered him "too soft" toward the Soviet Union.

An article in "Look" magazine, 11/19/63, set forth Kennan's foreign policy views and quoted him as criticizing the Congress, the Armed Forces, and the FBI for making national policy. When he was later interviewed by a Bureau representative concerning this, Kennan apologized, claiming that he had been misquoted and had not seen the article before it was published. Regarding Kennan's explanation, the Director noted: "I am not impressed with his explanation. H." Kennan also wrote a letter to the Bureau in which he again apologized for the slip-up.

Bufiles show that Kennan in the past has expressed admiration for the Bureau, has maintained cordial relations with us, and furnished helpful and pertinent material while he was with the State Department.

Dear	•

Your recent letter was received on July 12th, and the interest which prompted you to communicate with me is both understandable and reassuring. It was good of you to furnish me your observations concerning threats being made by the Communist Party upon our way of life.

I would like to take this means to assure you that there has been no lessening whatsoever in the attack upon this country by the Communist Party, USA, or by the communist-bloc countries. You may be sure this Bureau is ever cognizant of its jurisdiction in the internal security field and will continue making every effort to discharge its responsibilities with the highest degree of thoroughness and dispatch.

The pages from "Presbyterian Life" which you furnished are being returned, and I am enclosing some material which I hope you will find of interest.

NOTE: There is no record of correspondent in Bufiles. George F. Kennan, presently an established source, was former Ambassador to the Soviet Union and Yugoslavia. He is presently associated with the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton University. During 1956 following Kennan's statement to the effect he would not try to obstruct admitting Red China to the United Nations, the Director commented that apparently this Ambassador had fallen for the Soviet line. During 1963 an article he wrote which criticized the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Bureau in the matter of passports, visas and re-entry permits appeared in the Congressional Record. He remarked that the two agencies were not in one accord with the State Department concerning Yugoslavia. His comments apparently were based upon a misconception he held that this country was not a member of the Soviet-bloc. The Director instructed that he be contacted and straightened out.

Dear Mr Hoover:

I have read your books and speeches and have followed your career with interest and appreciation. The American people owe you a great debt of gratitude for your services in crime prevention and your vigilance and fight against Communism. Thus it is, I turn to you for help. The July 15th issue of Presbyterian Life just arrived. This magazine goes to everyone who is a member of the Pres. church. There is an article by George Kennam - that infuriated me. One would assume that he is a expert on Communism since he was ambassador to Russia for so many years.

It is distressing and maddening to find he has written a whitewash of Communism & the whole conspiracy. He insist, one cannot be simply against Communism since there are so many different kinds. He ignores the part that whether Russian, Chinese, Cuban, etc they all wish to see our way of life destroyed. He states "It is no exaggeration to say that the influence of the American Communist Party today in our society is negligible."

I'm sure you will agree with me that a rebuttal be written to Mr. Kennar's article. Only a man of your stature would be read or listened to. Kknow you will see the importance of correcting Mr Kennar's impression that the influence of Communism is negligible in this country. I hope and pray you will find time to do this Mr. Hoover. Hope to hear from you.

The Sources and Uses of Strength

Read: Joshua 1:1-9; Ephesians 6:10-17; Isaiah 40:31.

A good many years ago a friend sent to me an invitation he found printed on a church bulletin which he thought was very beautiful. It said:

"To all who sorrow and need comfort; To all who are weary and need rest; To all who are weak and need strength; We bid you welcome. Come to the House of God and here lay your burdens down."

I studied it for a while and then decided that it would be useful in our church if it were put exactly the other way around. So when it was in our church bulletin, it said:

To all who are joyful and need God's-blessing on their joy:

To all who are vital and need great purposes; To all who are strong and need to find the glorious uses of their strength; We bid you welcome. Come to the House of God and here take your burdens up."

I was afraid that the first invitation implied that the church is for weaklings. It seemed to say that if you are so dispirited and ailing that you cannot make it on your own, then the church can prop you up with such aids for the falling as prayer and faith and talk about God. But if you are a strong person, vigorous and independent and gay, then you can forget about God and pass up the church. Often the church is not so much a hospital for the weak as it is a gymnasium for those who glory in their strength.

The whole truth, however, is that the church is both. We need both sorts of invitations on our bulletin. That is not because we have two sorts of people in our congregations, but because every one of us has two sorts of needs. Those who live with God live in the surging exaltation with which Habakkuk soars up to his great conclusion: "I will rejoice in the LORD, I will joy in the God of my salvation. God, the LORD, is my strength; he makes my feet like hinds' feet, he makes me tread upon my high places." No doubt some of you go to church feeling like the young deer, prancing and scampering and exulting on the hilltops. But we also come to church saying, "Out of the depths I cry to thee, O Lord! LORD, hear my voice!" This is not always for separate Sundays, So complex are we that on the same Sunday a part of us can be exulting in strength while at the same time, deep within us, there is another part that is crying out for help. The twelve-year-old who is bursting with vitality can also feel lost and bewildered. The fullback who yesterday was charging down the field festooned with tacklers can plummet from the victory celebration to the depths of personal discouragement.

One thing we can be sure of is that, for everyone who is human, life will be a sore fight from the beginning to the end. The sweet old thing with the cane and the shawl does not need God's help any more than the vigorous battler who is in the thick of the struggle.

It is not the weaklings in the Bible who have given us the assurances of God's help. It is Joshua, the intrepid general, who heard God say, "Be strong and of good courage; be not frightened, neither be dismayed; for the Lord your God is with you." It is David, the giant killer and hero king, who said, "In my distress I called upon the LORD. . . . God is my strong refuge." It is the hard-driving and dauntless apostle, who boasted, "I can do all things in him who strengtheneth me."

I have never forgotten some advice which a doctor, a gynecologist indeed, gave at a meeting of college students who were looking for vocational guidance. One of the girls asked him about social work. He answered, "I strongly advise against it; leave that for older women who may not take it so much to heart." Then he explained that a girl who is a caseworker will go to a home where the children are being terribly treated. She will work out a budget for the family, and arrange for the man to get a job, and secure some counseling for the mother. Then in two weeks she goes back, and everyone is more miserable than ever. So she writes it all up in her file, and that night she cannot sleep. The doctor said, "She will probably have a dozen other cases like that, and pretty soon I will get her for a patient." Then he added, "There is just one exception; a girl who has a strong and very meaningful religious faith would probably be able to take it." There it is-the greater people we are, in our striving and our feeling, the more we will need the strength that God can give. That is true whether what threatens to break us up is other people's families or our own.

Strength to stand anything that life can do to us is the great promise of the Christian faith. It offers to make us victorious over anything that fate can bring. It be us know that happiness is possible.

THE COVER. In this photograph of an American girl and an African woman at a village market in Ghana, photographer James Foote has captured the feeling of friendship existing between two persons despite a wide disparity of race and culture. This kind of relationship is a common experience for members of "Operation Crossroads Africa" teams. More of Mr. Foote's incisive photographs of this unique venture are found beginning on page 8.

George F. Kennan, whose perceptive essay, The Right Way to Counter Communism, appears on page 5, is currently a professor both at the Institute for Advanced Study, in Princeton, N.J., and at Princeton University. Presbyterian Kennan has served as United States Ambassador both to Russia and to Yugoslavia, and is an authority on the history and attitudes of the Communist world.

Mrs. Freddie Saunders, author of Why Migrant Children Fail in School (p. 17), has been the principal of an elementary school in Mission, Texas, for twenty-two years. The community is on the border of the United States and Mexico, in the Lower Rio Grande Valley of Texas. Mrs. Saunders is now working with the second generation of families who traditionally follow the maturing of crops over a large area of the United States, but continue to call Mission, Texas, their home base.

The Reverend Herbert G. Grether, who wrote From the King's English to the King's Thai, is an expert on the problems of translating the Scriptures into Thai, having spent the last several years working on a revision of the Thai Bible. In a previous article (June 15, 1965), fraternal worker Grether told of the problems and possibilities of Christianity in modern Thailand.

by George F. Kennan

suppose it's only fair that I should be asked to lead a discussion of "the ethics of anti-communism." The last thirty-seven years of my life have been preoccupied mostly, in one way or another, with the problem of international communism. And it seems to me that I have stood pretty much in the center of the brickbats that fly back and forth in this connection. I have a respectable collection of abusive and sometimes unprintable letters from people who think that I haven't been anti-communist enough. On the other hand, I am one of the few Americans who have had the distinction of being thrown out of Stalin's Russia on charges of being too anti-Soviet. And I can remember a certain week, in 1950, when the walls of Rio de Janeiro were decorated with hundreds of great tar inscriptions saying: "To death with Kennan." These were inscriptions put there by the local communists. I was buried repeatedly in effigy at that time, incidentally, by Brazilian communist students, who did me the moving courtesy of putting a white cross on the little black coffin they used for this purpose.

Nobody can be blamed for being exercised about international communism. There has been plenty to be exercised about. I think a healthy capacity for moral indignation is essential to understanding what communism is all about. In our Embassy in Moscow, when we got a new young officer assigned to us who had been trained in the Russian language, if, on first confrontation with the Soviet newspapers in the morning, he didn't rise from his desk and go storming around the office saying, "Look what these so-and-so's have said today!"—if he didn't do this, he was no good to us. It was a case where you had first to be capable of getting angry in order to understand what was up; and then you had to learn to control your anger.

The Soviet leaders obviously do not wish us well. Their ideology forbids them to do so. If they had their way, little would remain, I am sure, of our world position or of the things we value here at home.

But despite all this, I must say that I find the term "anti-communism" a very misleading one.

First of all, if you are going to talk, today, about anti-communism, you have to begin by answering the question: anti-whose-communism? Karl Marx's, or Lenin's, or Stalin's, or Mao's, or Gomulka's, or even Tito's, since he himself insists on using the term? These are by no means identical. Not even the communists themselves pretend any longer that they are. If all you say is that you are "against communism," you haven't made yourself very clear. You cannot simply say, "I am against them all," because in some respects the various outlooks that go by the name of communism are not just different but are actually in conflict with each other, so that you can't be against one of them in all its aspects without being, by implication, in favor of another one in those same aspects.

Suppose, then, you pick a certain communist country—let us say the Soviet Union—and say, "When I talk about anti-communism, it is this country I mean and it is the communism of this country I am against." But there are two things you could have in mind when you express yourself in this way: One, the present reality of the Soviet system with its internal institutions and practices; the way the regime treats its own citizens, and so on. Or, two, its external behavior: things it does on the world scene which affect adversely our interests and those of world peace, and which strike us as unjust or deceitful or aggressive.

Now-these-two things-are-not-the same. We may-not-like the internal practices and institutions of the Soviet system, but so long as they don't have external effects that damage our interest, they are not really our business. Unless we have such dreams of grandeur that we picture ourselves as fit to rule the world, which I think very few of us do, then the golden rule is obviously going to apply here: We must agree to let Russians be Russians, and not try to substitute our conscience for theirs.

Perhaps you simply like to use the term "anticommunism" to record your abhorrence of the theory and practice of government which you understand to prevail in Russia. You can't mean, surely, that you are against all the institutions and practices of the Soviet system. There are a great many things that take place under the authority of, and in the name of, that system that are not all reprehensible: Schools are taught, people heal the sick, scientists pursue the quest for knowledge. Perhaps these things serve communism to some degree; the regime has often tried to make them do so. But this is not all they serve. Teachers teach, as they do here, because this is their pride and their profession and they feel it important that young people should be taught. Doctors heal for similar reasons. And scientists pursue their research because, like scientists everywhere, they have learned the nobility and the excitement of the quest for knowledge.

Obviously, it is not all features of communism that we are against—only certain ones. But the sweeping term "anti-communism" does not suggest this.

And if we take just those things that we do definitely dislike in a communist system—such things as governmental hypocrisy, denial of civil liberties, the deliberate use of the big lie, automatic abuse and denigration of fallen statesmen—then we have to recognize that it is not in communist countries alone that such things are to be found; nor are they made any worse, just because they go under the banner of communism. Yet this, too, the term "anti-communism" does not suggest. It is, in fact, definitely misleading in this case; because it seems to carry the implication that we think these evils are confined to a single political system in a single part of the world, and that all other civilizations are wholly immune to them.

But suppose we turn for a moment to that aspect of international communism about which we do have a right to protest: to the behavior of communist regimes as actors on the world scene. Here again, we come up against great variations among communist governments. We have our problems with the Yugoslav government, but I am here to testify, after just spending two and a half years in that country, that the way it conducts itself in international affairs is as different from the conduct of the Chinese Communists, or of Yugoslavia's Albanian neighbors, as night is from day. The attitudes taken towards us by such diverse regimes as say the Soviet one, the Cuban, the Chinese, the Hungarian, and the Polish represent quite different problems for U.S. policy. To try to sum up our response to all of them by saying that our policy is one of "anticommunism" is simply not meaningful.

I can think of certain non-communist governments whose behavior towards us and towards the international community generally in recent years has been by no means superior to that of certain communist governments I could name. Do we really wish, by using the term "anti-communist," to obscure all this; to leave the implication that falsehood, malice, cantankerousness, irresponsibility, territorial expansionism, and aggressive behavior either do not exist in the behavior of non-communist states or are reprehensible only when they go by the name of communism? If not, why use the term "anti-communist"? Why not be specific? Why not oppose these phenomena, as such, wherever we encounter them?

Now how about anti-communism as a term relating to political forces within our own national life?

Never strong in membership or even in voter support, the American Communist Party nevertheless gained considerable moral influence, especially in intellectual circles, during the 1930's. This was primarily a result of the shattering effect of economic crisis and the loss of confidence in established American values which that crisis occasioned. The communists were greatly aided by their ability to identify at that time with anti-fascist groups generally, particularly in the case of the Spanish Civil War. They capitalized extensively on the revulsion to fascism which swept over the liberal West.

With the development of the so-called cold war in the late 1940's, the strength and influence of the American Communist Party began to decline rapidly. Even at the time of the anti-communist hysteria in the early 1950's, it already was a very minor force in our society. Today it is a tiny and pathetic little band of people embracing, I suppose, not much more than five thousand members, if that, or something less than one hundredth part of one per cent of our adult population. It is no exaggeration to say that the influence of the American Communist Party today in our society is negligible. If you were to comb the country, you would thave a hard time finding a less influential group.

I have had many occasions, in the past 40 years, to know and observe people who are communists. Some of them were indeed brutal, treacherous and dangerous people. But others were idealists people acting out of the deepest bewilderment and despair and misguided courage and desire to find the right answer. I must confess to you that deeply as I have disagreed with these people, and profoundly as I have deplored the methods and tactics to which they were led to subscribe, there have been many instances where I have had more respect for them, in all their error and all their hopelessness, than for many pillars of respectable American society, vegetating in the smugness and self-ishness and superficiality of their particular brand of philistinism.

To err, as we all know, is only human; and there is not one of us who does not do it with the greatest of regularity. To err with courage, with conviction, with self-sacrifice, and out of the agony of the soul, can at least be said to be tragic. But to err out of cowardice, of complacency, of jealousy, of vindictiveness or of greed, has not even this to be said for it; and I am not prepared to believe that error of this sort is any more acceptable in the sight of God just because it clothes itself in "anti-communism."

The Marxist-Leninist ideology was based on some serious misconceptions; and the methodology embraced by its adherents, under Lenin and Stalin, was in many respects evil and inexcusable. But no movement of our time, I am sorry to say, has more to show in the way of dedication, hard work, and selflessness, than does the movement that goes by the Leninist-Marxist name. We should not forget this; and when it comes to the American Communist Party, in particular, we should not be too self-righteous in our condemnation of men who have been made what they are by the stamp of circumstances—and circumstances, in many instances, for which every one of us in my generation, at least, bears a share of the blame.

Now there are many people who, when they use the term "anti-communism," have in mind not the little American Communist Party of this day but a whole variety of tendencies and conditions they associate with the word communism: tendencies and conditions supported by far wider circles than just the members of the Communist Party: such things as the increase in the powers of the central government, the high degree of paternalism which seems to them to be reflected in the existing social-security arrangements and other programs of social benefit, an inadequate degree of military aggressiveness in foreign policy, absence of demonstrative patriotic fervor, and so on. And to this I would just like to say that these are of course views you can hold: these tendencies and conditions do exist in our society, for better or for worse, and it is perfeetly all right for an American citizen to be against them, if this is the way he sees things. But what all this has to do with communism is not apparent.

The founder of one of this decade's most successful experiments in international understanding sums up his philosophy in this fashion: "When you are under a hundred-pound bag of cement with an African, a lot of barriers break down."

Since 1958, Dr. James H. Robinson, pastor emeritus of the Church of the Master, New York, has translated this statement into a program by which more than one thousand American college students, teachers, and other specialists have gained firsthand insight into Africa's emergent nations. This summer nearly three hundred youthful Americans are being sponsored by "Operation Crossroads Africa" and, for the first time, twenty-six Africans will visit the United States.

"Operation Crossroads Africa" has married Dr. Robinson's interest in the African continent and his talent

Church links missions to building program. When First Presbyterian Church of Oklahoma City decided to erect its new $800,000 sanctuary, they added $200,000 for aiding the building programs of mission enterprises in the U.S. and overseas. To date, pastor C. Ralston Smith reports the church has expended nearly $85,000 for the following: $8,000 for an isolation ward at the hospital in Dembi Dollo, Ethiopia; $50,000 for building a library chapel at the theological seminary in Seoul, Korea; $12,500 toward a science-chapel building at Pikeville (Kentucky) College; $7,000 for an agricultural center at Boggs Academy, Keysville, Georgia; and $5,200 for physiotherapy and surgical equipment for Presbyterian Hospital, Taegu, Korea. More funds will be expended, says Dr. Smith, as pledges are fulfilled.

Gifts Make College Possible For Seventy-four Young People

In these pages a year ago there appeared an article, "Churches Asked to Help Send Needy Young Persons to College." Since a number of congregations and even a few individuals—fifty one, actually—responded to the suggestion in that article and a similar one in Monday Morning, we think it appropriate to give a report of progress.

The fifty-one churches and other donors contributed a total of $6,708. These funds were added to the $10,000 appropriated by the Commission on Religion and Race and the $20,000 appropriated by the Board of Christian Education from its share of the denomination's General Mission money. The total assisted seventy-three Negroes and one American Indian with grants of $150 to $750 (average grant $496).

None of these young people, with perhaps two exceptions, even dreamed of college as a possibility when they were high-school sophomores. Even if they had, they would have been unable to qualify for college. What turned the trick was attendance at the Summer Study Skills Program of the Board of National Mission's Educational Counseling Service. Through that remarkable tutorial program of six weeks' duration, each had been fired with the possibility of a college education and given the skills and professional guidance to obtain admission to an accredited institution.

Not one had failed or dropped out at the end of the first semester. The second semester's results are not in at this writing. One or two are on quite shaky ground. Will they make it? We don't know yet. But one statistic gives us confidence. Of the 228 "graduates" of the Summer Study Skills Program who are now in college as freshman, sophomores, juniors, and seniors, only eight have had to drop out. They dropped out for family reasons, entrance into military service, or other reasons beyond their control. None was a dropout for academic reasons.

And what about 1965-66? Again, we have $30,000-$15,000 from the Commission on Religion and Race and $15,000 from the Board of Christian Education. The donor churches and others have promised $2,380 of the $34,575 needed to keep last year's students in college this year. We believe the balance needed will yet come in.

But with no new money, no new freshmen can be helped to enter college this fall. They keep applying just the same. At the moment, we have nino applicants whose needs total $13,827. Aid from the colleges will reduce the need in each case, but not enough to enable the student to enter without a Student Opportunity Scholarship also.

A bonus for those who work with the Opportunity Scholars is the letters of appreciation which are received. One student wrote: "Again I would like to thank you for all you have done for me. I am sure many fellows like myself need only one chance. I have really gained a lot from the experience of being a college student. I hope someday I will be able to do the things for younger boys and girls that you are doing for me."

THE HURLY WAY TO COUNTER COMMUNISM

(Continued from page 7) in favor of these things to some degree, but no more so than millions of other people; and to suggest that all of these tendencies in our society-most of which, to the extent they have been realized at all, have been realized: through the operation of our democratic processes, and largely by act of Congress-are simply the result of some refined and diabolic Communist intrigue, by means of which tens of thousands of influential citizens, government servants, and legislators are affected without knowing it, is not only to propagate a preposterous absurdity, but it is also to do a profound disservice to the national cause.

In individual psychology the sense of being the innocent victim of unseen conspiratorial forces is often the beginning of, and a symptom of, mental: illness. In political life it is the beginning of totalitarianism, which is only a form of mass psychosis: the social equivalent of mental illness. So true is this, and so dangerous are the consequences of yielding to this sort of escapism, that one ought to reject such suggestions even when the available evidence might seem to support them. I cannot warn too strongly those of you who are students against associating yourselves, ever, with the suggestion that your personal troubles or those of the society to which you belong are attributable only to dimly-sensed conspiratorial forces, wholly external to yourselves, beyond your power of comprehension or influence, whose hostility you have done nothing to deserve. To accept such suggestions is a sure path to irrationality, to illusion, and to disaster.

Evil is an omnipresent substance of human life: around us and within us as well as without us. In a way, it is all of a piece, just as love and truth are all of a piece. When we struggle against it we must always regard that struggle as in part an overcoming of self. We cannot for this reason identify ourselves self-righteously with all that is good and clothe whatever opposes us in the colors of unmitigated evil. But this we tend to do when we try to make out of an impermanent semantic symbol, such as "anti-communism," the expression of a personal and political philosophy.

We all have in mind the events that have taken place in Moscow in the recent past. They have constituted in effect a third great crisis in the transfer of personal power from one set of hands to another in the history of a regime which has no adequate constitutional means of achieving such a transition. I have naturally had to think about this, and I have talked with friends, who, like myself have spent many years in the study of Aussian communism. Allof us, I think, have the impression that this recent series of events really marks the end of an epoch. It marks the final fading, as a political reality, of that aura of excitement and inspiration and authority which Moscow was able to radiate in the wake of the Russian Revolution of 1917, over restless, discontented elements in the western

Russia remains today a great power, as she was before 1917. She remains a problem to us as she would have been before 1917 had we then been an active participant in world affairs. But the importance of Moscow as a source of inspiration and authority for the communist parties of the West, and even for the communist parties now in power in Eastern Europe, has been extensively and probably decisively shattered.

Whoever, then, tries to make anticommunism-into a political or ethical philosophy is addressing himself to the past. He is talking about things that were, not things that are. This is, as we all know, an unbelievably endangered world in which we live. The ultimate problems created by nuclear science and by overpopulation-by man's new-found ability to destroy his habitat entirely or to make it intolerable by multiplying himself within it beyond the point of endurance-stare us in the face. To neither of these problems does mere anti-communism even suggest an answer; and the morbid preoccupation with this term can scarcely be explained otherwise than as the reflection either of an inability to free one's self from the anxieties, the seizures, or the nightmares of the past, or a lack of the requisite manliness to face the reality of the present, I think it is high time that we, all of us, threw off these shackles, emancipated ourselves from the power of vague semantic symbols, and turned our faces resolutely, with all the realism and the honesty we can muster, to the problems of the present and the future.

NOTE: cannot be identified in Bufiles. Mr. George F. Kennan is the former U. S. Ambassador to Russianand Yugoslavia. He is now with the Institute for Advance Study. When the Bureau investigated him for his position as Ambassador to Russia, some of the individuals felt that his policy toward Russia was too soft. Kennan has felt that we should not try to hinder Red China's admission to the U. N. The Director expressed amazement that Kennan had apparently fallen for the Soviet line. In 1963 he was critical of the Bureau & INS on their attitude of issuing passports, visas and re-entry permits for people from Yugoslavia. He felt that Yugoslavia was being considered as a member of the Soviet-Bloc. He was contacted by Assistant Director Sullivan regarding our position. While he was at the State Department, we had cordial relations with him. PRESBYTERIAN LIFE:

We have had limited cordial correspondence with this publication. The last outgoing was in 1958. We have had several inquiries concerning it from individuals who felt it leaned toward the left.

The article captioned "The Right Way to Counter Communism" by George F. Kennan is a treatise on the subject of "anti-communism" pointing out that it is a fallacy in current times to label every form of government that is opposed to our form of government as communist, and that we should broaden our vision and label these other ideologies in their true sense, and points out that whoever "tries to make anti-communism into a political or ethical philosophy is addressing himself to the past, and points out that other problems of the world such as nuclear science, overpopulation, etc., are problems to be considered and cannot be answered by "anti-communism."

George P. Kennan, former U. S. Ambassador to Yogoslavia, furnished to Mr. W. C. Sullivan by letter dated 2/6/67 copies of articles from a Yugoslav immigrant newspaper in Chicago, "Sloboda." Mr. Kennan indicated in his letter that he had received the copies of the articles anonymously by mail on 2/8/67.

Mr. Kennan said the articles indicated to him that the 1/29/67 bombings of Yugoslav diplomatic establishments in North America could have been carried out by Serbs. Mr. Mennan's letter has been acknowledged separately.

The articles related in no way to the 1/29/67 bombings but discuss prior demonstrations against Yugoslav establishments in Chicago, New York and Toronto. Another article concerned the 11/26-27/66 bombing of the Yugoslav Embassy in Paris in which two Yugoslav technical experts were slightly injured.

The incidents and substance of the information in the articles furnished by Kennan had previously been developed in the DIPBON investigation and available data on had previously been compiled and furnished to General Investigative Division which had also previously initiated inquiries concerning any link between the Paris bombing and the 1/29/67 bombing.

George Kennah

Dear Mr. Sullivan:

It is my impression, from what has appeared in the press, that the Bureau is participating in the investigation of the recent bombing outrage against official Yugoslav premises in this country and in Canada. That is my reason for addressing this letter to you.

I received on February 3, without any indication of the identity of the sender, the enclosed sheets which appear to be pages from the Yugoslav émigré newspaper in Chicago, issue of December 10, 1966. I assume that they were sent to me in view of my recent service as U. S. Ambassador in Belgrade. They offer no legal proof, of course, of the complicity of these Serbs in the bombing attempts, but they certainly demonstrate that these people were by no means above such abuse of the hospitality of this country. Their espousal of the public promises of like-minded Serbs in Canada to assassinate President Tito, if and when he attends the Montreal exposition, give further strength to the evidence suggesting that they were not unconnected with the recent bombings which, as you know, occurred in Canada as well as in this country. To me the circumstantial evidence of their complicity is very powerful, and the unabashed demand for lawless violence with which these articles are replete only strengthens this hypothesis.

I pass this on to you for whatever usefulness it may have to the Bureau in its investigative work.

With warm regards,

SYNOPSIS:

With the growing threat of nuclear war, the continued ideological conflict, and the massive export of arms by major industrial countries, an urgency is attached to improve Soviet-American relations. Memorandum to Mr. T. W. Leavitt
Re: United States - Soviet Union
1917 - 1976;
Review of Foreign Affairs Article on U.S. - USSR Relations
62-46855

DETAILS:

George F. Kennan is Professor Emeritus at the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, University. He was U. S. Ambassador to the Soviet Union in 1952, and to Yugoslavia, 1961 - 63. He is an author and scholar, who has written extensively about Soviet affairs.

"Foreign Affairs" is a quarterly review published by the Council on Foreign Relations, New York, New York.

The evolution of relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, from the inception of Bolshevik rule in 1917 to the present, forms the backdrop for George F. Kennan's article "The United States and the Soviet Union, 1917 - 1976." From this perspective Kennan focuses on the myriad of circumstances and decisions which have resulted in the irony of two ideological antagonists finding comfort in alliance during two major global conflicts while remaining constant and, at times, bitter enemies.

Kennan traces many of the problems of Soviet-American relations to the very earliest days following the two Russian revolutions, of 1917 - the fall of Tsardom to a democratic regime and the subsequent November takeover of the Bolsheviks. There existed little understanding in the United States of the nature of the political conflict within Russia during this volatile period. The initial widespread belief in the United States that the Bolsheviks were German agents, not to be taken seriously outside the context of European power politics, was the first of many miscalculations which led to the potentially ominous atmosphere of today. Even if this and subsequent miscalculations can be written off as by-products of wartime confusion and overreactions to inflated rhetoric, Kennan firmly believes that certain basic fundamental elements of the Soviet-American relationship were in the past and, at times, continue to be ignored, if understood at all. These elements include:

Memorandum to Mr. T. W. Leavitt Re: United States - Soviet Union 1917 - 1976; Review of Foreign Affairs Article on U.S. - USSR Relations 62-46855

- 1) the ideological commitment of the Bolshevik communist leadership;
- 2) the fact that the United States and USSR must live with each other since neither side would ever be in a position to achieve total destruction of the other;
- 3) neither total antagonism nor total identity of interests is possible in any international relationship.

The failure to recognize these basics has led the United States to a dangerously inconsistent pattern of optimism, disillusionment, anger, and overreaction. This cycle is only magnified when the American people are misled for short-term interests, such as occurred during World War II, when hopes of postwar collaborations with the Soviets were encouraged to justify their inclusion in the Alliance. As events unfolded in the postwar period, it became abundantly clear that Soviet intentions were anything but honorable. The American public's reaction to this set of events contributed to a great extent to the chapter of history known as the "McCarthy Era."

After citing numerous other examples of patch-work inconsistency in our relationship with the Soviet Union, Kennan discusses the outlook for the future. As the author states, "It would be idle to pretend... that the prospects for the future of Soviet-American relations are anything less than problematical. Formidable impediments continue to lie across the path of any efforts at improvement." These include: repressive USSR internal policies; continued Soviet rhetorical denunciations of the United States and western society; continued maintenance of large, threatening military forces; and a cloak of secrecy which builds fear and thus overreaction from the West.

Memorandum to Mr. T. W. Leavitt Re: United States - Soviet Union 1917 - 1976; Review of Foreign Affairs Article on U.S. - USSR Relations 62-46855

There are, however, counterbalancing bright spots to watch for, such as the continued awareness of dangers of nuclear competition and proliferations and impending change in Soviet leadership with probability of more a pragmatic, less ideological, stance.

In Kennan's estimation good relations are possible if the following guidelines are adhered to:

- 1) greater steadiness and realism in the perception of our relationship;
- 2) control of U. S. military-industrial complex and concomitant mutual effort in the reduction of arms;
- 3) forego internal U. S. political rhetoric designed to provide United States with external rival;
- 4) long-term U. S. diplomatic consistency;
- 5) less dramatization of foreign policy by media;
- 6) more concern and study of intentions rather than reaction to perceived capabilities.

As summation, Kennan states that time is of the essence in our relationship with the Soviet Union. With the growing threat of nuclear war and the continued massive export of arms from major industrial countries, the stability of an already precariously balanced world is seriously threatened.

ommittee pproves Kennan

Associated Press Reporter

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday approved unanimously e nomination of George F Kennan as Ambassador to Yugoslavia after hearing him say he is confident Marshal Tito will remain independent of Russia and Red China.

Kennan, a veteran career diplomat and one-time Ambassador to the Soviet Union, cautioned that while there are undoubted differences between Russia and Red China they (lo not offer anything "for us to crow over or get excited about."

"I don't look for any early dramatic or complete break."

But he said the Red Chinese have attacked Yugoslavia rather savagely and he is confident Yugoslavia will find it to her interest to remain independent.

Kennan said Yugoslavia has achieved an independence of Moscow far greater than any country in the Red bloc "and I think we should be happy to see that country maintain maximum independence."

Kennan said he is "not one bit optimistic" over the chances for a drastic improvement in relations with Soviet Russia.

"We've got to make progress in the field of disarmament before tensions loosen up," he added.

As for Yugoslavia, Kennan said the United States should continue to help in the development of that country to encourage Tito to maintain his independence of Moscow-

Kennnan also said that he loes not now consider "as relevant" his views in late 1957 when he created an international sensation by advocating disengagement in Europe. He said that there had been "very important millitary developments" since the time he suggested that forces of the East and West each be pulled back from the line which now divides Europe.]

[The ambassador-designate said he had been "instructed by my critics" and that he was "very happy at this time to merge my views" with those of the Kennedy Administration. Kennan did not say so but he is known to be highly enthusiastic about the new Administration. He said he hoped Secretary of State Dean Rusk would reinstate him as a career foreign service officer. He had served over 26 years as such before he was let go by the late Secretary John Foster Dulles.] The Senate Committee, after hearing their testimony, also approved unanimously the nominations of:

Philip M. Coombs of Connecticut, nominee for the new post of Assistant Secretary of State for Educational and Cultural Affairs.

Francis T. P. Plimpton, New York lawyer, to be deputy representative to the United Nations, deputy representative on the Security Council and a member of the U. N. delegato the United States from Hungary in 1947 and as a result lived under the Russian regime for approximately two-and-one-half year during which time he endured many bitter experiences as far as the Communists were concerned and has also recently had reason to believe that his brother was murdered by the Communists. stated that he believes KENNAN has certain sympathies toward the Soviet Government. He advised he did not wish to lead anyone to believe that he felt that KENNAN was in any way a Communist tool, but he believed that KENNAN had optimistic viewpoints concerning the Communists, which were described by as "Communist gangsters".

felt that KENNAN's optimistic viewpoints concerning the Communists were unconsciously influencing his ideas. He felt that because of KENNAN's experiences in the Foreign Service field he would be able to do an excellent job of handling the position as Ambassador to Yugoslavia, but felt he would have to hesitate in recommending him for a high level State Department appointment as he feels KENNAN advocates a "too soft" policy towards the Soviet regime. added that because of the bitter experiences he has had with the Communists he is the advocate of a strong forceful policy towards the Soviet Union.

Education

Princeton University Princeton, New Jersey

SA	on February 6,	1961:

	. Assi	stant to the Registrar

The following investigation was conducted by

KENNAN commenced school in Princeton University in February, 1922, and graduated in June, 1925, receiving an A. B. Degree with a major in History. He graduated with a 2.72 average and ranked 83rd in a class of 219. During his junior and senior years, he averaged a 3-plus in his major of History.

He was a member of the Key and Seal Club and also a member of the Whig-Clio Club while an undergraduate at Princeton University.

His parents were listed as Mr. K. KENNAN and LOUISE WHEELER KENNAN, 309 Cambridge Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He attended St. Johns Military Academy, Delafield, Wisconsin. These records reflected that he was born on February 16, 1904, in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. These records reflected that his father was a lawyer and a graduate of Repon College and his mother was a graduate of the University of Michigan.

Secretary, Bureau of Alumni Records, made available the following alumni record for GEORGE FROST KENNAN:

This record reflected that after graduating from Princeton University with an A. B. Degree in 1925, KENNAN applied for a position with the United States Foreign Service, and entered this service in 1926. He served in the Foreign Service as an officer between the years 1927 and 1944 in Berlin, Riga, Vienna, Moscow, Prague, Lisbon and London. From 1933 to 1935, he was the Russian speaking aid to Ambassador BULLIT in Moscow and remained there until 1937.

During World War II, he was the First Secretary of the American Legation in Berlin. He was placed in a concentration camp for enemy diplomats by the Germans and after his release from this concentration camp, he became the Counselor of the American Legation in Lisbon and later received the position of Counselor to the American Delegation to the European Advisory Commission in London in 1943.

NK 161-49 NAH:rac

He was Minister Counselor to Ambassador AVERELL HARRIMAN in Moscow in 1945 to 1946 and served in the same capacity for a short while after that to General W. BEDILL SMITH. He then returned to the U. S. Department of Foreign Affairs to the new National War College and then became the Chief of the State Department Policy Planning Staff and while in this capacity he originated the "containment of Russia" policy. In 1949, he continued as a counselor to the State Department and in 1950 left the State Department on extended leave of absence to take a position with the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton, New Jersey.

In 1952, he returned to the Foreign Service as Ambassador to Russia. He remained in this position from April, 1952, until October, 1952, when he was recalled from Moscow at the Kremlin's request for allegedly "slandering" the Soviet Union.

In 1953, he returned to the Institute for Advanced Study where he has remained to date as a professor.

While a professor at the Institute for Advanced Study KENNAN has delivered Stafford Little lectures at Princeton University in 1951 and again in 1953-1954. He has also served as a member of the Advisory Council in the Department of History at Princeton University and as an alumni trustee from 1951 until 1955.

In 1957, he was the George Eastman Visiting Professor at Oxford University in England for the academic year 1957-1958.

In January, 1961, he was listed as returning to the U. S. Diplomatic Service as Ambassador to Yugoslavia.

While at the Institute for Advanced Study, KENNAN commenced writing a chronicle of Soviet-American relations from 1917 to 1920. This was to be written in three volumes. Volume one was titled "Russia Leaves the War" and this volume received a Pulitzer Prize in 1957 and also the Non-Fiction Gold Medal Award from the American Book Publishers Council, the American Booksellers Association and the Book Manufacturers Institute in 1957. The second volume was published in 1958 and was titled "The Decision to Intervene".

In 1954, he entered the race for Democratic nomination to Congress in Pennsylvania's 19th district. However, several days after entering this race, he withdrew because three other individuals also entered the race for the Democratic nomination and he decided that his personal commitments at Princeton University would prevent him from fullfilling those commitments which he would meet in this primary contest were he to continue in it. At this time, he owned a farm in East Berlin, Adams, County, Pennsylvania. He had owned this farm since 1942.

He is an active layman of the Presbyterian Church and a member of the First Church in Princeton, New Jersey.

In June, 1956, he received the honorary degrees of Doctor of Laws from both Dartmouth and Yale Universities. Also, in 1956, he received a Doctor of Laws honorary degree at the Princeton University Bicentennial Convocation.

While an undergraduate student at Princeton University, KENNAN resided at 58 Wiggins Street, Princeton, while a freshman; at 115 Pine Hall, Princeton University, while a sophomore and at 14 Little Hall during his junior and senior years.

	Assistant to the Secretary of the University, advised that KENN	AN had conducted one Stafford Little lecture in 1951 on the topic	of 'World War II." She stated that in 1953 and 1954, he conducted on the topic"Basic Factors in Americ	a's Foreign Relations."

further advised that KENNAN was elected in June, 1951, to a term as Alumni Trustee which term lasted until June, 1955. She stated that the alumni trustees were elected for a four-year period and they met about four times a year. She stated there were 42 to 45 members on the Alumni Trustees.

She stated that Professor D. C. SAYRE, former Chairman of the Faculty Committee on Public Lectures, Princeton University, had been in charge of the Stafford Little series when KENNAN lectured in these series in 1951, 1953 and 1954, but he was now deceased. She stated that she did not know anyone else who would be able to comment on KENNAN's Stafford Little lectures at present.

Pr	rofessor JOSEPH R. STRAYER, Chairman of	the History
Department,	Princeton University, advised SAS and	on February 6, 1961	, that he had been a feltow classmate of GEORGE F. KENNAN, graduating from Princeton University together in the Class of 1925. He stated that he had maintained contact with KENNAN over the years and that KENNAN has served on the Advisory Committee of the History Department in the past. He stated that this is an honorary position and the Advisory Committee is made up of a group of distinguished persons who are chosen because of their distinguished positions. He stated they meet for dinners several times a year but really have no official status with the History Department of Princeton University.

Professor STRAYER said that KENNAN majored in history and was a serious student. He stated that even during the time that he was an undergraduate at Princeton, he was intent on Russian affairs. He said that KENNAN made a good record at Princeton and is a distinguished alumnus.

Professor STRAYER stated that he has also had a social relationship with KENNAN and his family and considers him to be a person of the highest integrity and character and a loyal citizen. He said that KENNAN is a very able person and is extremely well qualified for a top position with the U. S. Government. He said he has no reservations at all concerning KENNAN and would recommend him highly for a position of trust and confidence.

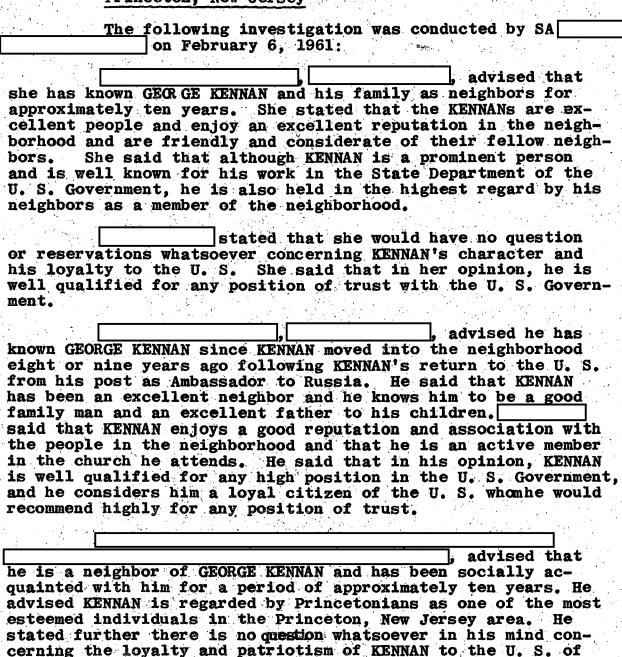

Professor STRAYER advised that he knew of no other classmates of KENNAN and himself who were in the Princeton, New Jersey, and with whom KENNAN would have maintained any active association during the years since he has returned to Princeton from the Foreign Service.

Detective ______, Trenton, New Jersey,
Police Department, advised SA _______ on February 7, 1961, his files contained no arrest record for KENNAN.

MISCELLANEOUS

	The files of the	e "Trenton	Times"	newspaper,	Trenton,
New Jersey	were checked	on February	6, 196	l by SA
	reflected an A			rticle date	d May 15,
1952 which	in part read a	as follows:

"Kennan attracted much diplomatic attention in 1947 by putting forth the idea that the United States ought to 'contain' Communism. Then Chief of the State Department Policy Planning Staff, he advanced the idea that became the United States policy in an article written under the pseudonym of 'Mr. X' in Foreign Affairs in 1947.

"It is clear that the main element of any United States Policy toward the Soviet Union must be that of a long term, patient, but firm and vigilant containment of Russian tendencies, 'the writer declared'."

The article set out the United States would have to deal for many years with Russia "as a rival not a partner". It also outlined the view that if the Soviet Union could be held in check for a decade or more, the result might be either a "mellowing" attitude or a breakdown of Russian power.

A news clipping dated November 12, 1952 indicated that GEORGE F. KENNAN, formerly of Princeton, New Jersey, was declared persona non grata as United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union for likening present Russian restrictions and diplomats to those in Nazi Germany in 1941 and had returned home to the United States for consultations with Secretary of State DEAN ACHESON.

MISCELLANEOUS

The records of "The Milwaukee Journal" newspaper library were examined on February 7, 1961, by Special Agent and reflected the following information:

The September 13, 1954, issue of "The Milwaukee Journal" contains an article captioned "Kennan Role Is Denounced." This article reflected that Representative CHARLES J. KERSTEN of Milwaukee had charged GEORGE KENNAN with advocating 'pro-communist policies' in a speech the preceeding Sunday in Milwaukee. This article further reflected KERSTEN stated he considered KENNAN's policies as 'pro-communist' because KENNAN insists that foreign affairs should be conducted on 'practical' rather than on 'moral' grounds and because KENNAN maintained 'We should be very careful not to antagonize Communist leaders even by "words".' KERSTEN, the article also related, attacked KENNAN for advocating that the free world should simply hold the lines against further Soviet expansion rather than undertake a policy of 'liberation.'

"The Milwaukee Journal" of September 18, 1954, carries an article captioned "Reuss Defends George F. Kennan." This article reflects the following information: HENRY S. REUSS (currently a United States Congressman from Wisconsin) defended American diplomat GEORGE F. KENNAN, who had been attacked by Representative CHARLES J.KERSTEN. REUSS charged in this article that KERSTEN was waging a campaign based on hatred, suspicion and distrust. REUSS added also that 'Kennan is a clean loyal American who is a member of Milwaukee's oldest and finest families.

"The Milwaukee Journal" of June 4, 1960, in an article captioned "Kennan Says Danger of War Hasn't Risen" describes GEORGE F. KENNAN as one of the country's foremost experts on the cold war who was former ambassador to Russia and a veteran State Department diplomat. This article relates also that he in 'borrowing a phrase from Theodore Roosevelt' said that the best principle of international relations was to 'speak softly and carry a big stick.'

The article also reflected that KENNAN did not think danger of all-out war had increased since the collapse of the Paris Summit Conference.

The article also noted that KENNAN was in Wisconsin in connection with the 75th anniversary of St. John's Military Academy, Delafield, Wisconsin, from which he graduated in 1921.

On February 8, 1961, CHARLES J. KERSTEN advised as follows:

He does not believe GEORGE KENNAN is or was a Communist but believed that KENNAN was naive politically regarding Communism and had advocated pro-communist policies. KERSTEN stated that he believed KENNAN had been weak in his attitude towards Russia and that KENNAN's policy of "containment" did not go far enough. He, KERSTEN, disagreed with this policy and believed that more affirmative efforts should be taken to liberate Communist captive countries.

KERSTEN concluded that the foregoing information regarding GEORGE KENNAN was merely his opinion and belief based upon his, KERSTEN's, having followed KENNAN's career for many years. KERSTEN stated that he had no specific or concrete documentations for any of his above expressed opinions.

KERSTEN also added that he, KERSTEN, was an admirer of and had been a co-worker with the late Senator JOSEPH MC CARTHY from Wisconsin and that KENNAN had been in open disagreement with both former Senator MC CARTHY and himself.

for the USDS on September 1, 1926, and was continuously employed by the USDS until his retirement on July 29, 1953. This card reflects he has been assigned as Vice Consul and Secretary in the Diplomatic Service, assigned to American Embassies or Legations in Geneva, Switzerland, Hamburg, Germany, Berlin, Germany, Tallinn Estonia, Riga, Latvia, Moscow, Russia, Vienna, Austria, Prague, Czechoslovakia, Lisbon, Portugal, and London, England. It also reflects he was the United States Ambassador to Russia from April 2, 1952, until the occasion of his retirement on July 29, 1953.

This service record card also reflects the appointed was born on April 16, 1904, at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and the record contains a notation that the appointee's official personnel file had been forwarded to the Federal Records Center, St. Louis, Missouri, date not shown.

On February 2, 1961, the appointee's security file, as maintained by the Office of Security, USDS, was reviewed by SA ______, and this file failed to disclose that any background investigation was ever conducted concerning the appointee by the Office of Security, USDS, except for a review of his official personnel folder in 1953. The file contained no additional pertinent information.

On February 6, 1961, Mr. DEAN ACHESON, an attorney with the law firm of Covington and Burling. Suite 701, 740 15th Street, N. W., who is a former Secretary of State under former President HARRY S. TRUMAN, advised SA he considers the appointee an old, old friend. He stated that the appointee grew up in Wisconsin where he had been exposed to the German language and customs by the predominant German population there and added the appointee's father worked in Wisconsin for one of the railroads, whose policy it was to encourage immigration from northern Europe with land grants and employment and in this connection, an uncle of the appointee used to travel to Germany and Russia and used to bring back German and Russian literature in the early years of the 20th Century, which the appointee studiously and diligently studied as a young boy. He further stated that the appointee graduated from Princeton University and immediately thereafter entered the foreign service of the USDS where he remained until his retirement in 1953 after an absolutely brilliant career. Mr. ACHESON further stated that when the appointee entered the foreign service, he used to spend his evenings studying and learning the language and customs of the people in whose WFO 161-153 country he was then serving, as contrasted to other foreign service officers who used to spend their evenings in other unstudious type ways. Mr. ACHESON also stated the appointee is a very perspicacious individual, adding that the appointee's reports from Moscow, based on his studies of the Soviet and the Communist Government during the mid 1940s, foretold quite accurately Russia's actions for the next ten years. He further stated the appointee served in various assignments overseas and that at one time during his assignment in Washington, D. C., the appointee served as Counselor of the USDS and also served as Assistant Commandant of the War College and also as Head of the Planning Staff. He stated that it was he, the appointee, General MARSHALL, and a few other USDS individuals who developed the "Marshall Plan." He also added that after the appointee served as the Head of the Planning Staff of the USDS, he grew restless and requested a change in assignment and was, therefore, sent to Russia as United States Ambassador. He added the appointee served with distinction there but when arriving in Berlin from Moscow en route to the United States for consultation, the appointee answered an inquiry from a newsman about things in Moscow by publicly comparing unfavorably his treatment by the Russians with his earlier internment in Berlin by the Nazis, and this so enraged the Soviet Government officials that they declared him persona non grata and, therefore, he had to be replaced. Mr. ACHESON also stated that at one time the appointee visited at least five South American countries on a study project from the USDS and upon returning to Washington, D. C. prepared a very comprehensive and thorough report on his findings. He added that if this report "had ever seen the light of day," the current Cuban situation would have nothing on reactions that would have been stirred all over Latin America. ACHESON stated that this report was actually suppressed by the Department. He also stated that in his opinion it was regrettable that JOHN FOSTER DULLES did not give the appointee an assignment in 1953 which required automatic retirement for the appointee. - 3 -

WFO 161-153 He also stated that after Mr. KENNAN retired, he went to work at the Institute for Advanced Studies at Princeton, New Jersey, where he undertook to write a trilogy on the Soviet-United States relations from 1917 on and added that the first volume of this work is probably one of the most remarkable histories ever written. He stated that each letter, telegram and cablegram sent to the United States from the Embassy in Russia during the period from 1917 to 1920 is analyzed and the whereabouts of the President of the United States and the Secretary of State during this period is shown and the appointee's account records a nightmare of errors and misunderstandings. The book shows how cables were mis-delivered or delayed and also shows how action was taken on messages delivered three months after their dispatch when action should have been taken within twenty-four hours after their dispatch. Mr. ACHESON stated that the appointee had also been offered a full professorship by the Yale University, which he declined as he wanted to finish writing the history of United States-Soviet relations. Mr. ACHESON further stated that the appointee is a remarkable man who has out distanced all of his contemporaries in knowledge and sensitivity. He added the appointee has a beautiful English prose style and a deep mystical strain and added the appointee is qualified one hundred per cent plus for ambassadorial appointment. He also stated the appointee is the type of person who can "charm the bark off a tree." He also stated that at one time the appointee was giving a lecture over the British Broadcasting Company Radio Network, on which occasion he advocated disengagement, that is, withdramal of both Russian and United States forces from Europe. Mr. ACHESON added that upon receipt of this information, he, as Secretary of State, with expected protest from our European allies, was compelled to deny publicly that disengagement was a policy of the USDS and even had to denounce the appointee's "Messianic" urge." He added that later on after this incident had more or less cooled off, the appointee was reportedly to have said that his enemies are the best people or that the best people were against him, but apparently this did not seem to bother Mr. KENNAN too much as he continued to write him (ACHESON) very friendly letters quite often.

He stated, however, GEORGE FROST KENNAN testified on April 30, 1954, before the Personnel Security Board of the United States Atomic Energy Commission in the matter of J. ROBERT OPPENHEIMER. In substance KENNAN testified concerning his association with OPPENHEIMER in connection with the Policy and Planning Staff of the USDS, of which KENNAN had been Director. KENNAN testified that he regarded OPPENHEIMER as one of the great minds of the generation and that OPPENHEIMER had whole heartily and intelligently corroborated with him in his advisory position in an effort to reach their objective.

It should be noted that upon the conclusion of the hearing before the Personnel Security Board, which hearings lasted from April 12, 1954, through May 6, 1954, the Board recommended to the Commissioners of the Atomic Energy Commission that Mr. OPPENHEIMER's "Q" clearance be revoked and that OPPENHEIMER's access to restricted Atomic Energy Commission data be denied, and the Commissioners concurred in this finding and, accordingly, Mr. OPPENHEIMER's access to restricted Atomic Energy Commission data was denied, and his "Q" clearance was terminated.

On February 10, 1961, SA _______ reviewed the file pertaining to the appointee, which file is maintained by the Evening Star"newspaper morgue, and the file contains newspaper articles appearing in the "Evening Star" newspaper under the dates indicated, which articles are deemed pertinent or appropriate.

August 24, 1947

American Quarterly Review "Foreign Affairs" issue of July, 1947, was reviewed, which contained an article entitled "The Sources of Soviet Conduct," which article was reportedly written by a Mr. X. Mr. X is reportedly GEORGE F. KENNAN and the article is a formidable analysis of the Politburo's motives and maneuvers.

July 22, 1951

Professor ROMAN SMAL-STOCKY, Marquette University, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in the current issue of "Ukrainian Bulletin" criticized KENNAN for in effect sustaining Russia's theory that the Ukrainians should live in political bondage under the Russians. Mr. KENNAN has said that Ukraine is economically as much a part of Russia as Pennsylvania is a part of the United States.

, b / C

May 15, 1952 - Associated Press Biographical Service

Mr. KENNAN developed the "containment theory" in a lengthy memorandum he submitted to the State Department at the end of World War II. As early as 1945, he had recommended from Russia that lavish American aid for the Soviet Union be cut back quickly.

November 3, 1952

GEORGE F. KENNAN left Europe today after having been barred from Russia in a October 3, 1952, note charging he had "slandered"the Soviet Union by telling newsmen in Berlin that life for foreign diplomats in Moscow was about the same as being interned by the Nazis in Berlin during World War II.

April 9, 1953

GEORGE F. KENNAN, the State Department announced, will go on a pension in the near future over policy difference with Secretary of State DULLES. KENNAN's containment policy holding back Russian expansion and strenghening the free nations was criticized by DULLES, who advocated moral pressure and propaganda moves, looking to ultimate liberation of Soviet satellite states.

May 16, 1953 - Associated Press

GEORGE F. KENNAN in an address on May 15, 1953, at Notre Dame University, which granted him an honorary degree, hit out at people who "distort and exaggerate" the communist problem. In an apparent attack on Congressional Red hunters, naming no names, he said, "The forces of intollerence and political demagogery are greedy forces and unrestrained. There is no limit to their ambitions or their imprudence." He spoke of the dangers of totalitarianism and charged that greedy forces working under the banner of an alarmed and exercised anticommunism impel American people to adopt many of the habits of thought and action, which Soviets have tried for years to impose on them.

March 17, 1954

GEORGE F. KENNAN, who maintains a legal residence at East Berlin, Pennsylvania, withdrew as a candidate for the WFO 161-153 Democratic nomination for Congress in Pennsylvania's 19th District on account of existing personal commitments inconsistent with requirements of a primary contest. November 11, 1957 GEORGE F. KENNAN, a staff member of the Institute for Advanced Studies, Princeton, New Jersey, this year is a visiting professor at Oxford University and gave the first of a series of lectures on "Russia, the Atom and the World" for the British Broadcasting Company. November 25, 1957 GEORGE F. KENNAN gave the third talk in his series of lectures for the British Broadcasting Corporation on November 24, 1957, and called for the possible withdrawal of both eastern and western forces in Europe. January 12, 1958

DEAN ACHESON has dis-associated himself from KENNAN's current theory and thinks that KENNAN made a serious mistake in his estimate of Russia's policies and behavior and in recommending the withdrawal of American troops from Europe as part of a negotiated settlement with the Kremlin.

March 11, 1958

DOROTHY THOMPSON, columnist, stated that DEAN ACHESON is furious at KENNAN for challenging ACHESON's baby of arming West Germany within the framework of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO)."

March 30, 1958.

DEAN ACHESON in "Foreign Affairs" article in the April, 1958, issue has said that Mr. KENNAN's policy of disengagement is an illusion.

February 9, 1961

President KENNEDY nominated GEORGE F. KEENAN as Ambassador to Yugoslavia.

SUBJECT:

GEORGE FROST KENNAN SPECIAL INQUIRY

Special inquiry investigation conducted on Kennan at request of State Department. He has been appointed Ambassador to Yugoslavia. Investigation completed except interviews of U. S. Senators from Pennsylvania.

Kennan was career officer in State Department until 1953 when he retired and has been at Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, New Jersey. He has been described as one of foremost experts in American-Soviet policies.

Kennan has maintained cordial relations with the Bureau and furnished helpful and pertinent material while he was with State Department. In 1952 he was Ambassador to Soviet Union.

Article in 5/7/56 issue of "New York Times" reported that, according to Kennan, we should look upon the changes in Soviet policy with hope to establish future relations and, although our relations with China were not promising we should not try to obstruct admission of Red China to the United Nations if a majority of that body wants it. The Director expressed amazement at the way Kennan had fallen for the Soviet line.

In 1947 Kennan became renowned for his "containment" policy of preventing further Soviet expansion. He testified in J. Robert Oppenheimer hearings that Oppenheimer intelligently helped him in Kennan's advisory position to the Secretary of State and that Oppenheimer had a great mind. In 1957-1958 Kennan gave series of broadcasts in England during which he advocated withdrawal of troops from Germany by West and Soviet Union and that North Atlantic Treaty Organization should not be supplied with missiles. Dean Acheson advised he was compelled to criticize Kennan on this to avoid misunderstanding by our allies.

Alice Widener, columnist, New York City, who is on Special Correspondents List, feels Kennan is "Marxist in essence" from reviewing his writings. Andrew Alfoldi, Institute of Pacific Relations, feels Kennan has "too soft" attitude towards Soviets. Former U. S. Representative Charles J. Kersten said Kennan has been weak in attitude toward Russia. Others interviewed, including Dean Acheson, feel he is well qualified for ambassadorial position. NOT RECORDED

Memorandum to Mr. Evans Re: GEORGE FROST KENNAN

Observations

Kennan has written six books and a number of magazine articles in addition to a number of speeches containing his opinions on American foreign policy. The attached summary memorandum contains comments by others of Kennan's "containment" policy; his advocacy of admission of Red China to United Nations; and his ideas of withdrawal of troops from Germany. Analysis of Kennan's writings and speeches not being included in summary for transmittal to White House since it would entail review of all his writings to insure completeness and to avoid any possibility of charge of lack of objectivity by Bureau. Such an analysis would place us in position of making opinions rather than factfinding. Letter to White House transmitting summary includes statement that our investigation did not include a review or analysis of his writings or speeches.

RECOMMENDATION

That the attached cover letter and summary memorandum be delivered to State Department and to Mr. O'Donnell at the White House since Presidential appointment is involved.

United States Department of State, Washington, D. C., advised he has known Mr. Kennan socially and professionally since 1944, having first become acquainted with him when Mr. Kennan went to Moscow to serve under Ambassador Harriman. Ambassador Harriman said Mr. Kennan is one of the finest and most experienced men in the foreign service of the United States and added that he considers Mr. Kennan's analysis of communist matters to be penetrating and his advice to be significant.
Ambassador Harriman commented favorably concerning Mr. Kennan's character, associates, reputation and loyalty and recommended him for a position of trust.

William A. Crawford, Director, Office of Research and Analysis, United States Department of State, Washington, D. C., stated he served under Mr. Kennan in Mescow in 1945 and in the Department of State at Washington, D. C., from 1947 to 1949. He described Mr. Kennan as an exceedingly able and hard-working person who is highly qualified, both through education and experience, to be appointed to any type of position in the foreign service or in the United States Department of State. He commented favorably concerning Mr. Kennan's reputation, associates, character and loyalty and recommended him for a position of trust.

Hugh S. Cummings, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State, United States Department of State, Vashington, D. C., advised he has known Mr. Kennan professionally and socially since about 1929. He said he has served with Mr. Kennan at the Department of State and on foreign assignments on numerous occasions and he described Mr. Kennan as a very intelligent individual who possesses the highest standards of integrity. Hr. Cummings said that Mr. Kennan is a "one hundred per cent loyal United States citizen" whose record speaks for itself and recommended Mr. Kennan for a position of trust.

Charles Bohlen, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State, United States Department of State, Washington, D. C., advised he has known Mr. Kennan professionally and socially for over thirty years. Mr. Bohlen said Mr. Kennan is the best qualified person in the United States concerning United States - Soviet Union relations. He said Mr. Kennan is one of the few people in the Department of State who thoroughly understands the Russian objectives and because of this knowledge Mr. Kennan would be a definite asset in a position of trust and confidence. He said he has the highest regard for Mr. Kennan and commented favorably concerning Mr. Kennan's character, associates, reputation and loyalty.

Mass Dorothy Mossman, Secretary, Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, Nov Jersey, advised she has known Mr. Kennan since 1944 and became his private secretary in 1945 while Mr. Kennan was at the American Embassy in Moscow. She said she has been his secretary ever since that time with the enception of his first year at the Institute for Advanced Study. Miss Messman said that Mr. Kennan's intelligence is beyond her ability to describe and he gets along well with people. She said he is humble, but he is forceful in his beliefs. Covernment. He said that it. Kennan could remain at the Encitute for Advanced Study and be better off financially, but that it. Kennan folt it van his duty to serve his Covernment. It. Financial commented very favorably concerning it. Kennan's character, reputation and associates and recommended him without question for any appointment with the Department of State.

Charles J. Koroton, forcer United States Representative from Milweukee, Wisconsin, advised that he does not believe Ir. Kennan is or was a communist, but he believes Mr. Honnan has been naive politically regarding commuten and has advocated procommutat policies. No caid he bolieves Mr. Konnan has been weak in his attitudo toward Russia and that Hr. Kennan's policy of "containment" did not go for enough. Mr. Kersten said that ho disagrees with this policy and bolieves that woro affirmative efforts should be taken to liberate countries held captive by the communists. Mr. Kersten said that his opinion regarding Ir. Konnan is based upon his having followed Dr. Kennan's career for many years, and that he has no specific or concrete documentation for hic opinions concerning ir. Konnaa. Ir. Kersten said that ho, Mr. Morston, was an admiror of and a co-worker of the late United States Schator Joseph McCarthy of Wisconsin and that ir. Kennan had been escaly in disagreement with Sonator Excartly and Er. Kerston.

An individual, who has requested anenymity, but with when there has been insufficient contact to determine her reliability, advised in 1955 that her research in the subject of communish and Marrish had led her to the conclusion that the influence of Marrish in the Federal Government spring from the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, Now Jersey. Among the group of individuals she had in mind was George Konnan. She said she is opposed to Marrish and advised that Mr. Konnan's writings had indicated to her that he is a "Marrish in essence." She said her research work indicated that the danger was that such people, who have been an influence in the Government, particularly in the Department of State, and who have been susted have only taken up another position of influence.

The same individual was interviewed in 1961, at which time she advised she has never met Mr. Kennan and she has never heard anything unfavorable concerning his character or loyalty. She pointed out that she has made a complete study of the political writings of Mr. Kennan and considered his point of $\sqrt{ ext{view}}$ on foreign policy to be detrimental to the welfare of the United States. She said that his writings have added to the prestige of the Soviet Union. She said she considered Mr. Kennan to be inexpert concerning communism and his opinions to be not scholarly. She said his part in formulating the foreign policy of the United States would not be beneficial to the United States. She concluded by stating that her opinion is based exclusively on her studies of Mr. Kennan's writings.

Andrew Alfoldi, permanent member and professor, School of Historical Studies, Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, New Jersey, advised that he has known Mr. Kennan since July 1, 1955, when he, Professor Alfoldi, was appointed to the Institute for Advanced Study. said that since that time he has had many talks with Mr. Kennan concerning Russia. Professor Alfoldi stated that he is in disagreement with many of Mr. Kennan's ideas as far as Russia is concerned. He said he came to the United States from Hungary in 1947. He said he lived under the Russian regime for approximately two and one-half years, during which time he endured many bitter experiences, and recently has had reason to believe his brother was murdered by the communists. He said he believes Mr. Kennan has certain sympathies toward the Soviet Government. He said he did not wish anyone to believe that Mr. Kennan was a communist tool but he felt that Mr. Kennan's optimistic. viewpoints are unconsciously influencing his ideas. Professor Alfoldi added that because of the bitter experiences he has had under the communists, he is an advocate of a strong, forceful policy toward the Soviet Union. He said that because of Mr. Kennan's experience in the foreignservice field he would be able to do an excellent job as Ambassador to Yugoslavia, but said he would hesitate to recommend him for a higher level State Department appointment as he feels Mr. Kennan advocates a "too soft" policy toward the Soviet Union.

Dean Acheson, attorney, Washington, D. C., who is a former Secretary of State, United States Department of State, advised he considered Mr. Kennan an old friend. Mr. Acheson said that Mr. Kennan as a boy diligently studied German and Russian literature. He said that Mr. Kennan retired in 1953 after an "absolutely brilliant career" in the Department of State. Mr. Acheson further stated that after Mr. Kennan had entered the foreign service of the Department of State he spent his evenings learning the language and customs of the people in whose country he was then serving.

Mr. Acheson also advised that Mr. Kennan is a perspicacious individual and his reports from Moscow, which were based upon his studies of the Soviet Government during the middle 1940's, foretold quite accurately the Soviet Union's actions for the next ten years.

According to Mr. Acheson, Mr. Kennan served as Counselor of the Department of State; as Assistant Commandant of the National War College; and as head of the Policy Planning Staff, Department of State. Mr. Acheson said Mr. Kennan was one of a small group of individuals who assisted in developing the "Marshall Plan." He said that after his service with the Policy Planning Staff, Mr. Kennan grew restless and requested a change of assignment and was sent to the Soviet Union as United States Ambassador. This was in 1952.

Mr. Acheson commented that Mr. Kennan served with distinction in the Soviet Union, but upon arriving in Berlin, Germany, en route from Moscow to the United States for consultation, Mr. Kennan answered an inquiry from a newspaperman about conditions in Moscow by publicly comparing unfavorably his treatment by the Dussians with his treatment by the Nazis while interned in Berlin. This so enraged the Soviets, Mr. Acheson stated, that they declared him persona non grata and he had to be replaced.

Mr. Acheson said that after his retirement from employment at the Department of State, Mr. Kennan went to the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, New Jersey, where he undertook the writing of a three-volume history of the United States-Soviet Union relations beginning with 1917. He stated that the first volume of this work is probably one of the most remarkable histories ever written. Mr. Acheson was of the opinion that Mr. Kennan has outdistanced his contemporaries in knowledge and sensitivity.

Mr. Acheson recalled that Mr. Kennan gave a lecture over the British Broadcasting Company radio when he advocated disengagement; that is, withdrawal of Russian and United States forces from Europe. Mr. Acheson added that he, Mr. Acheson, knowing our European allies would protest, was compelled to publicly deny the policy of disengagement.

In connection with the above information, Mr. Kennan appeared in a series of six broadcasts in England over the British Broadcasting Company radio. The January 17, 1958, edition of "U. S. News and World Report," contained an article composed of excerpts from a statement by Dean Acheson which was critical of statements made by Mr. Kennan in his broadcasts. There is attached a copy of this article.

Mr. Acheson said that Mr. Kennan is qualified "one hundred per cent plus" for an ambassadorial appointment. He commented favorably concerning Mr. Kennan's character, associates, reputation and loyalty.

In addition to the above-mentioned persons, twentyone individuals were interviewed concerning Mr. Kennan. All of those individuals commented favorably concerning Mr. Kennan's character, reputation and loyalty to the United States.

The records of the Passport Office, Department of State, disclosed that Mr. Kennan was issued four passports between 1952 and 1958 for travel to various parts of the world in connection with official business and for pleasure. The file concerning Mr. Kennan at the Passport Office also indicated that previous applications for passports were made by Mr. Kennan in 1926, 1927, 1933, 1938, 1945 and 1947. Information was received that a special search had been made for the file which would reflect the issuance of passports to Mr. Kennan following these applications, but the file could mot be located.

Miscellaneous

According to the files of the Personnel Clearance and Visitor Control Branch, Division of Security, United States Atomic Energy Commission, Washington, D. C., Mr. Kennan testified on April 30, 1954, before the Personnel Security Board of the Atomic Energy Commission, which was considering the matter pertaining to J. Robert Oppenheimer. Mr. Kennan testified concerning his association with Dr. Oppenheimer in connection with the Policy and Planning Staff of which Mr. Kennan had been the Director. Mr. Kennan testified that he regarded Dr. Oppenheimer most highly as one of the great minds of his generation and that Dr. Oppenheimer had wholeheartedly and intelligently corroborated with him in his advisory position to the Secretary of State.

In connection with J. Robert Oppenheimer, hearings were held from April 12, 1954, through May 6, 1954, before the Personnel Security Board, United States Atomic Energy Commission, on the basis of that Board's recommendation to the Commissioners of the Atomic Energy Commission that Dr. Oppenheimer's "Q" clearance be revoked and his access to restricted Atomic Energy Commission data be denied. The Commissioners concurred with the Board's recommendation and Dr. Oppenheimer's access to restricted Atomic Energy Commission data was denied and his "Q" clearance was terminated.

The September 11, 1956, issue of "The Washington Post and Times Herald." Washington. D. C., contained an article by George E. Scholsky which referred to a recent article writton by Mr. Monnan in the magazine, "The New Leader." According to Lir. Sokoloky, Mr. Kennan made the point in this article that there was little hope for better relations between the United States and Red China and added "... I have acver shared and cannot nov share in the savage enthusiasm many Americans have verked up over the cause of heeping the Chizoso Communists out of the United Nations. I fail to see the logic of this position or to understand the overriding importance people attach to the question. It is not my understanding that we ever objected on principle to the inclusion of Communist states in the United Nations..." Hr. Sokolsky also reported that Mr. Rennan said in the Jame article in "The New Leader" the following:

"... And to scratch around now among Communist regimes to establish relative degrees of iniquity entitling some to membership and others not, is an undertaking for which I personally have no stomach..."

There is attached a copy of the article by Er. Sokolsky.

In the July, 1947, lesue of "Foreign Affairs" magazine there appeared an article entitled, "The Sources of Soviet Conduct, " written by "X." Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, then Counselor. Department of State, Washington, D. C., in his testimony on March 2, 1953, before the Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate, Vashington, D. C., identified Ur. "X" as Mr. Kennan. Mr. Boblen testified that essentially the article described the Soviet Union, and in it Mr. Kennan expressed the view that if the expansion of the Soviet Union was contained. Hr. Kennan felt that certain things night, in the future, happen within the Soviet system. Hr. Bohlen continued that Mr. Kennan suggested that the United States should direct its efforts to prevent further expansion by the Soviet Union. He said he had never felt the article was anything more than a partial description of United States foreign policy as he had known it since the end and of World War II. Mr. Bohlen stated that publicity given to Mr. Monnag's article in "Foreign Affairs" resulted in the uso of the word "containment" in describing Mr. Kennan's theories."

Mr. Bohlen said that at the time the article was written by Mr. Kennan the problem was not then something more positive than containment, but Mr. Kennan attempted to do what he could through this article to convince people of the necessity of not being indifferent to further extension of Soviet power. He said that at that time the alternative was noncontainment as against containment and not containment as against some more positive or dynamic action.

There is attached a copy of the article by "X" in the July, 1947, issue of "Foreign Affairs."

The "Monthly Summary of Trends and Developments" of August, 1947, published by the National Americanism Commission, Sub-Committee on Subversive Activities, The American Legion, Indianapolis, Indiana, contained a review of the article by "X" in the July, 1947, issue of "Foreign Affairs."

There is attached a copy of the review in the "Lonthly Summary of Treads and Developments."

THE SOURCES OF SOVIET CONDUCT

By X

HE political personality of Soviet power as we know it today is the product of ideology and circumstances: ideology inherited by the present Soviet leaders from the movement in which they had their political origin, and circumstances of the power which they now have exercised for nearly three decades in Russia. There can be few tasks of psychological analysis more difficult than to try to trace the interaction of these two forces and the relative rôle of each in the determination of official Soviet conduct. Yet the attempt must be made if that conduct is to be understood and effectively countered.

It is difficult to summarize the set of ideological concepts with which the Soviet leaders came into power. Marxian ideology, in its Russian-Communist projection, has always been in process of subtle evolution. The materials on which it bases itself are extensive and complex. But the outstanding features of Communist thought as it existed in 1916 may perhaps be summarized as follows: (a) that the central factor in the life of man, the factor which determines the character of public life and the "physiognomy of society," is the system by which material goods are produced and exchanged; (b) that the capitalist system of production is a nefarious one which inevitably leads to the exploitation of the working class by the capital-owning class and is incapable of developing adequately the economic resources of society or of distributing fairly the material goods produced by human labor; (c) that capitalism contains the seeds of its own destruction and must, in view of the inability of the capital-owning class to adjust itself to economic change, result eventually and inescapably in a revolutionary transfer of power to the working class; and (d) that imperialism, the final phase of capitalism, leads directly to war and revolution.

The rest may be outlined in Lenin's own words: "Unevenness of economic and political development is the inflexible law of capitalism. It follows from this that the victory of Socialism may come originally in a few capitalist countries or even in a single capitalist country. The victorious proletariat of that country, having expropriated the capitalists and having organized Socialist production at home, would rise against the remaining capitalist world, drawing to itself in the process the oppressed classes of other countries." It must be noted that there was no assumption that capitalism would perish without proletarian revolution. A final push was needed from a revolutionary proletariat movement in order to tip over the tottering structure. But it was regarded as inevitable that sooner or later that push be given.

For 50 years prior to the outbreak of the Revolution, this pattern of thought had exercised great fascination for the members of the Russian revolutionary movement. Frustrated, discontented, hopeless of finding self-expression — or too impatient to seek it — in the confining limits of the Tsarist political system. yet lacking wide popular support for their choice of bloody revolution as a means of social betterment, these revolutionists found in Marxist theory a highly convenient rationalization for their own instinctive desires. It afforded pseudo-scientific justification for their impatience, for their categoric denial of all value in the Tsarist system, for their yearning for power and revenge and for their inclination to cut corners in the pursuit of it. It is therefore no wonder that they had come to believe implicitly in the truth and soundness of the Marxian-Leninist teachings, so congenial to their own impulses and emotions. Their sincerity need not be impugned. This is a phenomenon as old as human nature itself. It has never been more aptly described than by Edward Gibbon, who wrote in "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire": From enthusiasm to imposture the step is perilous and slippery; the demon of Socrates affords a memorable instance how a wise man may deceive himself, how a good man may deceive others, how the conscience may slumber in a mixed and middle state between self-illusion and voluntary fraud." And it was with this set of conceptions that the members of the Bolshevik Party entered into power.

Now it must be noted that through all the years of preparation for revolution, the attention of these men, as indeed of Mark himself, had been centered less on the future form which Socialism would take than on the necessary overthrow of rival power which, in their view, had to precede the introduction of Socialism. Their views, therefore, on the positive program to be put into effect, once power was attained, were for the most part nebulous, visionary and impractical. Beyond the nationalization of industry and the expropriation of large private capital holdings there was no agreed program. The treatment of the peasantry, which according to the Marxist formulation was not of the proletariat, had always been a vague spot in the pattern of Communist thought; and it remained an object of controversy and vacillation for the first ten years of Communist power.

The circumstances of the immediate post-revolution period the existence in Russia of civil war and foreign intervention, together with the obvious fact that the Communists represented only a tiny minority of the Russian people — made the establishment of dictatorial power a necessity. The experiment with "war Communism" and the abrupt attempt to eliminate private production and trade had unfortunate economic consequences and caused further bitterness against the new revolutionary régime. While the temporary relaxation of the effort to communize Russia, represented by the New Economic Policy, alleviated some of this economic distress and thereby served its purpose, it also made it evident that the "capitalistic sector of society" was still prepared to profit at once from any relaxation of governmental pressure, and would, if permitted to continue to exist, always constitute a powerful opposing element to the Soviet régime and a serious rival for influence in the country. Somewhat the same situation prevailed with respect to the individual peasant who, in his own small way, was also a private producer.

Lenin, had he lived, might have proved a great enough man to reconcile these conflicting forces to the ultimate benefit of Russian society, though this is questionable. But be that as it may, Stalin, and those whom he led in the struggle for succession to Lenin's position of leadership, were not the men to tolerate rival political forces in the sphere of power which they coveted. Their sense of insecurity was too great. Their particular brand of fanaticism, unmodified by any of the Anglo-Saxon traditions of compromise, was too fierce and too jealous to envisage any permanent sharing of power. From the Russian-Asiatic world out of which they had emerged they carried with them a skepticism as to the possibilities of permanent and peaceful coexistence of rival forces. Easily persuaded of their own doctrinaire "rightness," they insisted on the submission or destruction of all competing power. Outside of the Communist Party, Russian society was to have no rigidity. There were to be no forms of collective human activity or association which would not be dominated by the Party. No other force in Russian society was to be permitted to achieve vitality or integrity. Only the Party was to have structure. All else was to be an amorphous mass.

And within the Party the same principle was to apply. The mass of Party members might go through the motions of election, deliberation, decision and action; but in these motions they were to be animated not by their own individual wills but by the awesome breath of the Party leadership and the overbrooding presence of "the word."

Let it be stressed again that subjectively these men probably did not seek absolutism for its own sake. They doubtless believed — and found it easy to believe — that they alone knew what was good for society and that they would accomplish that good once their power was secure and unchallengeable. But in seeking that security of their own rule they were prepared to recognize no restrictions, either of God or man, on the character of their methods. And until such time as that security might be achieved, they placed far down on their scale of operational priorities the comforts and happiness of the peoples entrusted to their care.

Now the outstanding circumstance concerning the Soviet régime is that down to the present day this process of political consolidation has never been completed and the men in the Kremlin have continued to be predominantly absorbed with the struggle to secure and make absolute the power which they seized in November 1917. They have endeavored to secure it primarily against forces at home, within Soviet society itself. But they have also endeavored to secure it against the outside world. For ideology, as we have seen, taught them that the outside world was hostile and that it was their duty eventually to overthrow the political forces beyond their borders. The powerful hands of Russian history and tradition reached up to sustain them in this feeling. Finally, their own aggressive intransigence with respect to the outside world began to find its own reaction; and they were soon forced, to use another Gibbonesque phrase, "to chastise the contumacy" which they themselves had provoked. It is an undeniable privilege of every man to prove himself right in the thesis that the world is his enemy; for if he reiterates it frequently enough and makes it the background of his conduct he is bound eventually to be right.

Now it lies in the nature of the mental world of the Soviet leaders, as well as in the character of their ideology, that no opposition to them can be officially recognized as having any merit or justification whatsoever. Such opposition can flow, in theory, only from the hostile and incorrigible forces of dying capitalism. As long as remnants of capitalism were officially recognized as existing in Russia, it was possible to place on them, as an internal element, part of the blame for the maintenance of a dictatorial form of society. But as these remnants were liquidated, little by little, this justification fell away; and when it was indicated officially that they had been finally destroyed, it disappeared altogether. And this fact created one of the most basic of the compulsions which came to act upon the Soviet régime: since capitalism no longer existed in Russia and since it could not be admitted that there could be serious or widespread opposition to the Kremlin springing spontaneously from the liberated masses under its authority, it became necessary to justify the retention of the dictatorship by stressing the menace of capitalism abroad.

This began at an early date. In 1924 Stalin specifically defended the retention of the "organs of suppression," meaning, among others, the army and the secret police, on the ground that "as long as there is a capitalist encirclement there will be danger of intervention with all the consequences that flow from that danger." In accordance with that theory, and from that time on, all internal opposition forces in Russia have consistently been portrayed as the agents of foreign forces of reaction antagonistic to Soviet power.

By the same token, tremendous emphasis has been placed on the original Communist thesis of a basic antagonism between the capitalist and Socialist worlds. It is clear, from many indications, that this emphasis is not founded in reality. The real facts concerning it have been confused by the existence abroad of genuine resentment provoked by Soviet philosophy and tactics and occasionally by the existence of great centers of military power, notably the Nazi régime in Germany and the Japanese Government of the late 1930's, which did indeed have aggressive designs against the Soviet Union. But there is ample evidence that the stress laid in Moscow on the menace confronting Soviet society from the world outside its borders is founded not in the realities of foreign antagonism but in the necessity of explaining away the maintenance of dictatorial authority at home.

Now the maintenance of this pattern of Soviet power, namely, the pursuit of unlimited authority domestically, accompanied by the cultivation of the semi-myth of implacable foreign hostility, has gone far to shape the actual machinery of Soviet power as we know it today. Internal organs of administration which did not serve this purpose withered on the vine. Organs which did serve this purpose became vastly swollen. The security of Soviet power came to rest on the iron discipline of the Party, on the severity and ubiquity of the secret police, and on the uncompromising economic monopolism of the state. The "organs of suppression," in which the Soviet leaders had sought security from rival forces, became in large measure the masters of those whom they were designed to serve. Today the major part of the structure of Soviet power is committed to the perfection of the dictatorship and to the maintenance of the concept of Russia as in a state of siege, with the enemy lowering beyond the walls. And the millions of human beings who form that part of the structure of power must defend at all costs this concept of Russia's position, for without it they are themselves superfluous.

As things stand today, the rulers can no longer dream of parting with these organs of suppression. The quest for absolute power, pursued now for nearly three decades with a ruthlessness unparalleled (in scope at least) in modern times, has again produced internally, as it did externally, its own reaction. The excesses of the police apparatus have fanned the potential opposition to the régime into something far greater and more dangerous than it could have been before those excesses began.

But least of all can the rulers dispense with the fiction by which the maintenance of dictatorial power has been defended. For this fiction has been canonized in Soviet philosophy by the excesses already committed in its name; and it is now anchored in the Soviet structure of thought by bonds far greater than those of mere ideology.

So much for the historical background. What does it spell in terms of the political personality of Soviet power as we know it today?

Of the original ideology, nothing has been officially junked. Belief is maintained in the basic badness of capitalism, in the inevitability of its destruction, in the obligation of the proletariat to assist in that destruction and to take power into its own hands. But stress has come to be laid primarily on those concepts which relate most specifically to the Soviet régime itself: to its position as the sole truly Socialist régime in a dark and misguided world, and to the relationships of power within it.

The first of these concepts is that of the innate antagonism between capitalism and Socialism. We have seen how deeply that concept has become imbedded in foundations of Soviet power. It has profound implications for Russia's conduct as a member of international society. It means that there can never be on Moscow's side any sincere assumption of a community of aims between the Soviet Union and powers which are regarded as capitalist. It must invariably be assumed in Moscow that the aims of the capitalist world are antagonistic to the Soviet régime, and therefore to the interests of the peoples it controls. If the Soviet Government occasionally sets its signature to documents which would indicate the contrary, this is to be regarded as a tactical manœuvre permissible in dealing with the enemy (who is without honor) and should be taken in the spirit of caveat emptor. Basically, the antagonism remains. It is postulated. And from it flow many of the phenomena which we find disturbing in the Kremlin's conduct of foreign policy: the secretiveness, the lack of frankness, the duplicity, the wary suspiciousness, and the basic unfriendliness of purpose. These phenomena are there to stay, for the foreseeable future. There can be variations of degree and of emphasis. When there is something the Russians want from us, one or the other of these features of their policy may be thrust temporarily into the background; and when that happens there will always be Americans who will leap forward with gleeful announcements that "the Russians have changed," and some who will even try to take credit for having brought about such "changes." But we should not be misled by tactical manœuvres. These characteristics of Soviet policy, like the postulate from which they flow, are basic to the internal nature of Soviet power, and will be with us, whether in the foreground or the background, until the internal nature of Soviet power is changed.

This means that we are going to continue for a long time to find the Russians difficult to deal with. It does not mean that they should be considered as embarked upon a do-or-die program to overthrow our society by a given date. The theory of the inevitability of the eventual fall of capitalism has the fortunate connotation that there is no hurry about it. The forces of progress can take their time in preparing the final coup de grâce. Meanwhile, what is vital is that the "Socialist fatherland" — that oasis of power which has been already won for Socialism in the person of the Soviet Union — should be cherished and defended by all good Communists at home and abroad, its fortunes promoted, its enemies badgered and confounded. The promotion of premature, "adventuristic" revolutionary projects abroad which might embarrass Soviet power in any way would be an inexcusable, even a counter-revolutionary act. The cause of Socialism is the support and promotion of Soviet power, as defined in Moscow.

This brings us to the second of the concepts important to contemporary Soviet outlook. That is the infallibility of the Kremlin. The Soviet concept of power, which permits no focal points of organization outside the Party itself, requires that the Party leadership remain in theory the sole repository of truth. For if truth were to be found elsewhere, there would be justification for its expression in organized activity. But it is precisely that which the Kremlin cannot and will not permit.

The leadership of the Communist Party is therefore always right, and has been always right ever since in 1929 Stalin formalized his personal power by announcing that decisions of the Politburo were being taken unanimously.

On the principle of infallibility there rests the iron discipline of the Communist Party. In fact, the two concepts are mutually self-supporting. Perfect discipline requires recognition of infallibility. Infallibility requires the observance of discipline. And the two together go far to determine the behaviorism of the entire Soviet apparatus of power. But their effect cannot be understood unless a third factor be taken into account: namely, the fact that the leadership is at liberty to put forward for tactical purposes any particular thesis which it finds useful to the cause at any particular moment and to require the faithful and unquestioning acceptance of that thesis by the members of the movement as a whole. This means that truth is not a constant but is actually created, for all intents and purposes, by the Soviet leaders themselves. It may vary from week to week, from month to month. It is nothing absolute and immutable — nothing which flows from objective reality. It is only the most recent manifestation of the wisdom of those in whom the ultimate wisdom is supposed to reside, because they represent the logic of history.

The accumulative effect of these factors is to give to the whole subordinate apparatus of Soviet power an unshakeable stubbornness and steadfastness in its orientation. This orientation can be changed at will by the Kremlin but by no other power. Once a given party line has been laid down on a given issue of current policy, the whole Soviet governmental machine, including the mechanism of diplomacy, moves inexorably along the prescribed path, like a persistent toy automobile wound up and headed in a given direction, stopping only when it meets with some unanswerable force. The individuals who are the components of this machine are unamenable to argument or reason which comes to them from outside sources. Their whole training has taught them to mistrust and discount the glib persuasiveness of the outside world. Like the white dog before the phonograph, they hear only the "master's voice." And if they are to be called off from the purposes last dictated to them, it is the master who must call them off. Thus the foreign representative cannot hope that his words will make any impression on them. The most that he can hope is that they will be transmitted to those at the top, who are capable of changing the party line. But even those are not likely to be swayed by any normal logic in the words of the bourgeois representative. Since there can be no appeal to common purposes, there can be no appeal to common mental approaches. For this reason, facts speak louder than words to the ears of the Kremlin; and words carry the greatest weight when they have the ring of reflecting, or being backed up by, facts of unchallengeable validity.

But we have seen that the Kremlin is under no ideological compulsion to accomplish its purposes in a hurry. Like the Church, it is dealing in ideological concepts which are of long-term validity, and it can afford to be patient. It has no right to risk the existing achievements of the revolution for the sake of vain baubles of the future. The very teachings of Lenin himself require great caution and flexibility in the pursuit of Communist purposes. Again, these precepts are fortified by the lessons of Russian history: of centuries of obscure battles between nomadic forces over the stretches of a vast unfortified plain. Here caution, circumspection, flexibility and deception are the valuable qualities; and their value finds natural appreciation in the Russian or the oriental mind. Thus the Kremlin has no compunction about retreating in the face of superior force. And being under the compulsion of no timetable, it does not get panicky under the necessity for such retreat. Its political action is a fluid stream which moves constantly, wherever it is permitted to move, toward a given goal. Its main concern is to make sure that it has filled every nook and cranny available to it in the basin of world power. But if it finds unassailable barriers in its path, it accepts these philosophically and accommodates itself to them. The main thing is that there should always be pressure, unceasing constant pressure, toward the desired goal. There is no trace of any feeling in Soviet psychology that that goal must be reached at any given time.

These considerations make Soviet diplomacy at once easier and more difficult to deal with than the diplomacy of individual aggressive leaders like Napoleon and Hitler. On the one hand it is more sensitive to contrary force, more ready to yield on individual sectors of the diplomatic front when that force is felt to be too strong, and thus more rational in the logic and rhetoric of power. On the other hand it cannot be easily defeated or discouraged by a single victory on the part of its opponents. And the patient persistence by which it is animated means that it can be effectively countered not by sporadic acts which represent the momentary whims of democratic opinion but only by intelligent long-range policies on the part of Russia's adversaries — policies no less steady in their purpose, and no less variegated and resourceful in their application, than those of the Soviet Union itself.

In these circumstances it is clear that the main element of any United States policy toward the Soviet Union must be that of a long-term, patient but firm and vigilant containment of Russian expansive tendencies. It is important to note, however, that such a policy has nothing to do with outward histrionics: with threats or blustering or superfluous gestures of outward "toughness." While the Kremlin is basically flexible in its reaction to political realities, it is by no means unamenable to considerations of prestige. Like almost any other government, it can be placed by tactless and threatening gestures in a position where it cannot afford to yield even though this might be dictated by its sense of realism. The Russian leaders are keen judges of human psychology, and as such they are highly conscious that loss of temper and of self-control is never a source of strength in political affairs. They are quick to exploit such evidences of weakness. For these reasons, it is a sine qua non of successful dealing with Russia that the foreign government in question should remain at all times cool and collected and that its demands on Russian policy should be put forward in such a manner as to leave the way open for a compliance not too detrimental to Russian prestige.

III

In the light of the above, it will be clearly seen that the Soviet pressure against the free institutions of the western world is something that can be contained by the adroit and vigilant application of counter-force at a series of constantly shifting geographical and political points, corresponding to the shifts and manœuvres of Soviet policy, but which cannot be charmed or talked out of existence. The Russians look forward to a duel of infinite duration, and they see that already they have scored great successes. It must be borne in mind that there was a time when the Communist Party represented far more of a minority in the sphere of Russian national life than Soviet power today represents in the world community.

But if ideology convinces the rulers of Russia that truth is on their side and that they can therefore afford to wait, those of us on whom that ideology has no claim are free to examine objectively the validity of that premise. The Soviet thesis not only implies complete lack of control by the west over its own economic destiny, it likewise assumes Russian unity, discipline and patience over an infinite period. Let us bring this apocalyptic vision down to earth, and suppose that the western world finds the strength and resourcefulness to contain Soviet power over a period of ten to fifteen years. What does that spell for Russia itself?

The Soviet leaders, taking advantage of the contributions of modern technique to the arts of despotism, have solved the question of obedience within the confines of their power. Few challenge their authority; and even those who do are unable to make that challenge valid as against the organs of suppression of the state.

The Kremlin has also proved able to accomplish its purpose of building up in Russia, regardless of the interests of the inhabitants, an industrial foundation of heavy metallurgy, which is, to be sure, not yet complete but which is nevertheless continuing to grow and is approaching those of the other major industrial countries. All of this, however, both the maintenance of internal political security and the building of heavy industry, has been carried out at a terrible cost in human life and in human hopes and energies. It has necessitated the use of forced labor on a scale unprecedented in modern times under conditions of peace. It has involved the neglect or abuse of other phases of Soviet economic life, particularly agriculture, consumers' goods production, housing and transportation.

To all that, the war has added its tremendous toll of destruction, death and human exhaustion. In consequence of this, we have in Russia today a population which is physically and spiritually tired. The mass of the people are disillusioned, skeptical and no longer as accessible as they once were to the magical attraction which Soviet power still radiates to its followers abroad. The avidity with which people seized upon the slight respite accorded to the Church for tactical reasons during the war was eloquent testimony to the fact that their capacity for faith and devotion found little expression in the purposes of the régime.

In these circumstances, there are limits to the physical and nervous strength of people themselves. These limits are absolute ones, and are binding even for the cruelest dictatorship, because beyond them people cannot be driven. The forced labor camps and the other agencies of constraint provide temporary means of compelling people to work longer hours than their own volition or mere economic pressure would dictate; but if people survive them at all they become old before their time and must be considered as human casualties to the demands of dictatorship. In either case their best powers are no longer available to society and can no longer be enlisted in the service of the state.

Here only the younger generation can help. The younger generation, despite all vicissitudes and sufferings, is numerous and vigorous; and the Russians are a talented people. But it still remains to be seen what will be the effects on mature performance of the abnormal emotional strains of childhood which Soviet dictatorship created and which were enormously increased by the war. Such things as normal security and placidity of home environment have practically ceased to exist in the Soviet Union outside of the most remote farms and villages. And observers are not yet sure whether that is not going to leave its mark on the over-all capacity of the generation now coming into maturity.

In addition to this, we have the fact that Soviet economic development, while it can list certain formidable achievements, has been precariously spotty and uneven. Russian Communists who speak of the "uneven development of capitalism" should blush at the contemplation of their own national economy. Here certain branches of economic life, such as the metallurgical and machine industries, have been pushed out of all proportion to other sectors of economy. Here is a nation striving to become in a short period one of the great industrial nations of the world while it still has no highway network worthy of the name and only a relatively primitive network of railways. Much has been done to increase efficiency of labor and to teach primitive peasants something about the operation of machines. But maintenance is still a crying deficiency of all Soviet economy. Construction is hasty and poor in quality. Depreciation must be enormous. And in vast sectors of economic life it has not yet been possible to instill into labor anything like that general culture of production and technical self-respect which characterizes the skilled worker of the west.

It is difficult to see how these deficiencies can be corrected at an early date by a tired and dispirited population working largely under the shadow of fear and compulsion. And as long as they are not overcome, Russia will remain economically a vulnerable, and in a certain sense an impotent, nation, capable of exporting its enthusiasms and of radiating the strange charm of its primitive political vitality but unable to back up those articles of export by the real evidences of material power and prosperity.

Meanwhile, a great uncertainty hangs over the political life of the Soviet Union. That is the uncertainty involved in the transfer of power from one individual or group of individuals to others.

This is, of course, outstandingly the problem of the personal position of Stalin. We must remember that his succession to Lenin's pinnacle of preëminence in the Communist movement was the only such transfer of individual authority which the Soviet Union has experienced. That transfer took 12 years to consolidate. It cost the lives of millions of people and shook the state to its foundations. The attendant tremors were felt all through the international revolutionary movement, to the disadvantage of the Kremlin itself.

It is always possible that another transfer of preëminent power may take place quietly and inconspicuously, with no repercussions anywhere. But again, it is possible that the questions involved may unleash, to use some of Lenin's words, one of those "incredibly swift transitions" from "delicate deceit" to "wild violence" which characterize Russian history, and may shake Soviet power to its foundations.

But this is not only a question of Stalin himself. There has been, since 1938, a dangerous congealment of political life in the higher circles of Soviet power. The All-Union Congress of Soviets, in theory the supreme body of the Party, is supposed to meet not less often than once in three years. It will soon be eight full years since its last meeting. During this period membership in the Party has numerically doubled. Party mortality during the war was enormous; and today well over half of the Party members are persons who have entered since the last Party congress was held. Meanwhile, the same small group of men has carried on at the top through an amazing series of national vicissitudes. Surely there is some reason why the experiences of the war brought basic political changes to every one of the great governments of the west. Surely the causes of that phenomenon are basic enough to be present somewhere in the obscurity of Soviet political life, as well. And yet no recognition has been given to these causes in Russia.

It must be surmised from this that even within so highly disciplined an organization as the Communist Party there must be a growing divergence in age, outlook and interest between the great mass of Party members, only so recently recruited into the movement, and the little self-perpetuating clique of men at the top, whom most of these Party members have never met, with whom they have never conversed, and with whom they can have no political intimacy.

Who can say whether, in these circumstances, the eventual rejuvenation of the higher spheres of authority (which can only be a matter of time) can take place smoothly and peacefully, or whether rivals in the quest for higher power will not eventually reach down into these politically immature and inexperienced masses in order to find support for their respective claims? If this were ever to happen, strange consequences could flow for the Communist Party: for the membership at large has been exercised only in the practices of iron discipline and obedience and not in the arts of compromise and accommodation. And if disunity were ever to seize and paralyze the Party, the chaos and weakness of Russian society would be revealed in forms beyond description. For we have seen that Soviet power is only a crust concealing an amorphous mass of human beings among whom no independent organizational structure is tolerated. In Russia there is not even such a thing as local government. The present generation of Russians have never known spontaneity of collective action. If, consequently, anything were ever to occur to disrupt the unity and efficacy of the Party as a political instrument, Soviet Russia might be changed overnight from one of the strongest to one of the weakest and most pitiable of national societies. Thus the future of Soviet power may not be by any means as secure as Russian capacity for self-delusion would make it appear to the men in the Kremlin. That they can keep power themselves, they have demonstrated. That they can quietly and easily turn it over to others remains to be proved. Meanwhile, the hardships of their rule and the vicissitudes of international life have taken a heavy toll of the strength and hopes of the great people on whom their power rests. It is curious to note that the ideological power of Soviet authority is strongest today in areas beyond the frontiers of Russia, beyond the reach of its police power. This phenomenon brings to mind a comparison used by Thomas Mann in his great novel "Buddenbrooks." Observing that human institutions often show the greatest outward brilliance at a moment when inner decay is in reality farthest advanced, he compared the Buddenbrook family, in the days of its greatest glamour, to one of those stars whose light shines most brightly on this world when in reality it has long since ceased to exist. And who can say with assurance that the strong light still cast by the Kremlin on the dissatisfied peoples of the western world is not the powerful afterglow of a constellation which is in actuality on the wane? This cannot be proved. And it cannot be disproved. But the possibility remains (and in the opinion of this writer it is a strong one) that Soviet power, like the capitalist world of its conception, bears within it the seeds of its own decay, and that the sprouting of these seeds is well advanced.

It is clear that the United States cannot expect in the foreseeable future to enjoy political intimacy with the Soviet régime. It must continue to regard the Soviet Union as a rival, not a partner, in the political arena. It must continue to expect that Soviet policies will reflect no abstract love of peace and stability, no real faith in the possibility of a permanent happy coexistence of the Socialist and capitalist worlds, but rather a cautious, persistent pressure toward the disruption and weakening of all rival influence and rival power.

Balanced against this are the facts that Russia, as opposed to the western world in general, is still by far the weaker party, that Soviet policy is highly flexible, and that Soviet society may well contain deficiencies which will eventually weaken its own total potential. This would of itself warrant the United States entering with reasonable confidence upon a policy of firm containment, designed to confront the Russians with unalterable counter-force at every point where they show signs of encroaching upon the interests of a peaceful and stable world.

But in actuality the possibilities for American policy are by no means limited to holding the line and hoping for the best. It is entirely possible for the United States to influence by its actions the internal developments, both within Russia and throughout the international Communist movement, by which Russian policy is largely determined. This is not only a question of the modest measure of informational activity which this government can conduct in the Soviet Union and elsewhere, although that, too, is important. It is rather a question of the degree to which the United States can create among the peoples of the world generally the impression of a country which knows what it wants, which is coping successfully with the problems of its internal life and with the responsibilities of a World Power, and which has a spiritual vitality capable of holding its own among the major ideological currents of the time. To the extent that such an impression can be created and maintained, the aims of Russian Communism must appear sterile and quixotic, the hopes and enthusiasm of Moscow's supporters must wane, and added strain must be imposed on the Kremlin's foreign policies. For the palsied decrepitude of the capitalist world is the keystone of Communist philosophy. Even the failure of the United States to experience the early economic depression which the ravens of the Red Square have been predicting with such complacent confidence since hostilities ceased would have deep and important repercussions throughout the Communist world.

By the same token, exhibitions of indecision, disunity and internal disintegration within this country have an exhilarating effect on the whole Communist movement. At each evidence of these tendencies, a thrill of hope and excitement goes through the Communist world; a new jauntiness can be noted in the Moscow tread; new groups of foreign supporters climb on to what they can only view as the band wagon of international politics; and Russian pressure increases all along the line in international affairs.

It would be an exaggeration to say that American behavior unassisted and alone could exercise a power of life and death over the Communist movement and bring about the early fall of Soviet power in Russia. But the United States has it in its power to increase enormously the strains under which Soviet policy must operate, to force upon the Kremlin a far greater degree of moderation and circumspection than it has had to observe in recent years, and in this way to promote tendencies which must eventually find their outlet in either the break-up or the gradual mellowing of Soviet power. For no mystical, Messianic movement—and particularly not that of the Kremlin—can face frustration indefinitely without eventually adjusting itself in one way or another to the logic of that state of affairs.

Thus the decision will really fall in large measure in this country itself. The issue of Soviet-American relations is in essence a test of the over-all worth of the United States as a nation among nations. To avoid destruction the United States need only measure up to its own best traditions and prove itself worthy of preservation as a great nation.

Surely, there was never a fairer test of national quality than this. In the light of these circumstances, the thoughtful observer of Russian-American relations will find no cause for complaint in the Kremlin's challenge to American society. He will rather experience a certain gratitude to a Providence which, by providing the American people with this implacable challenge, has made their entire security as a nation dependent on their pulling themselves together and accepting the responsibilities of moral and political leadership that history plainly intended them to bear.

men objected to its publication in its first draft for a variety of reasons. Some complained of unfair strictures against the Franco government, others that leading American industrialists were unjustly linked by innuendo with German cartels when in fact the U. S. government itself had encouraged such economic collaboration prior to 1939, and still others objected to FASCISM IN ACTION as of benefit only as propaganda material to left wing groups.

MONTHLY CHECK-LIST

July issue of FOREIGN AFFAIRS carried an extremely penetrating article entitled SOURCES OF SOVIET CONDUCT. The author "X" remained anonymous giving rise to considerable speculation as to authorship. The Communists flatly accused George TENWAN, Chief of General Marshall's new policy planning staff in the State Dopartment. It was obviously written by some one with first hand experience in Russia.

While valuable in tracing and outlining the true causes of Soviet Russia's aggressive foreign policy it nevertheless contained weekening elements of speculation based on hopes, many of them quite faint, that internal stresses and strains inherent in the Communist dictatorship might bring trouble to the Bolshevik rulers before they can still further jeopardize world peace. Some of the reasoning, particularly along economic lines, would quite naturally lead to certain definite breakdowns in western, free democracies with resultant tactical retreats in foreign policy. The same does not necessarily follow in a totalitarien system.

Russia has previously demonstrated that literally millions of her population may actually starve to death or be completely uprooted and removed from her coonomy and transported en masse to perish in Siberia without any noticeable reaction in her economic life. A million women and children died of starvation in the city of Leningrad alone during the war without affecting in the slightest the military defense of the city or appreciably the industrial output of the factory workers who wore fed on their jobs without being able to smuggle a morsel of food home to their dying families.

SATURDAY EVENING POST for August 9 had a good article by J. C. RICH entitled: "How the Garment unions licked the communists."

PLAIN TALK, NEW LEADER, and the NATIONAL REPUBLIC are all recommended for their excellent coverage on subversion.

ACHESON REJECTS "KENNAN PLAN"

The so-called "Kennan Plan" to pull U.S. troops out of Europe now is under attack by former Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

The Kennan suggestion, first broadcast in Britain and rebroadcast in U.S. and Germany, caused a sensation in Europe. Here is what Mr. Acheson says about it.

Following are excerpts from a statement by Dean Acheson that was issued in New York by the American Council on Germany on Jan. 11, 1958:

I am told that the impression exists in Europe that the views expressed by Mr. George Kennan in his Reith lectures [a series of lectures broadcast by the British Broadcasting Corporation], particularly that a proposal should be made for the withdrawal of American, British and Russian troops from Europe, represent the views of the Democratic Party in the United States. Most categorically they do not, as Mr. Kennan would, I am sure, agree. The opinions stated in the Reith lectures are not now made by Mr. Kennan for the first time. They were expounded by him within the Democratic Administration early in 1949, and rejected. They are today contrary to the expressed opinion of Democratic leaders in the Congress and outside of it.

Mr. Kennan can speak with authority in the field he knows—and a broad one it is—the field of Russian history and culture, and the attitudes of mind induced by the practice of Marxist-Leninist ideology.

Mr. Kennan has never, in my judgment, grasped the realities of power relationships, but takes a rather mystical attitude toward them. To Mr. Kennan there is no Soviet military threat in Europe. "If," he says, "the armed forces of the United States and Britain were not present on the Continent, the problem of defense for the continental nations would be priparily one of the internal health and discipline of the respecbe national societies, and of the manner in which they were organized to prevent the conquest and subjugation of their national life by unscrupulous and foreign-inspired minorities in their midst." A desirable state of health and discipline would enable them to say to the Soviet Union that, while it had the power to overrun them, "not a single Communist or other person likely to perform your political business will become available to you for this purpose." Then follows this almost Messianic statement:

"I think I can give personal assurance that any country which is in a position to say this to Moscow, not in so many words, but in that language of military posture and political behavior which the Russian Communists understand best of all, will have little need of foreign garrisons to assure its immunity from Soviet attack."

How can any man speak of a "personal assurance" to any such effect? On what does the guarantee rest, unless divine revelation? But, even in its terms, the assurance seems to contain its own refutation. In the present state of the distribution of power in this world, and in the light of the use made by the Russian Communist regime of its power to extend its authority, can one doubt that, were it not for the American connection, there would be more independent national life in Western Europe than there is in Eastern Europe?

Mr. Kennan's prescription for salvation by internal health and discipline within the national societies of Europe calls for a degree of wholesome purity which does not exist within any state I can think of. Not only that, but the normal and natural consequence of leaving Russian military power unopposable on the Continent would seem to mean a vast increase in the number of those Communists and other persons likely to perform Russian political business available to supplant those who ventured to oppose that business. The very withdrawal from the Continent of the Allies, whose presence alone permits Western Europe to withstand Soviet pressure, will make impossible the development of that national health and discipline which is supposed to make their presence unnecessary.

To speak, as Mr. Kennan did, of the alternative to American and British power in Europe as being "Soviet attack" is misleading. In many, perhaps in most, cases an attack by Soviet forces, faced with only token resistance, would not be necessary, as it was not in Czechoslovakia in 1948, or in Poland today. Soviet purposes could be accomplished by intimidation, with the lesson of Hungary in everyone's mind: Poland, by the way, might be the country which could come nearer than any in Europe to making the defiant-declaration Mr. Kennan advocates. They know the Russians even better than Mr. Kennan does. But that does not free the Poles from Russian domination. It is idle to suppose that they would be more free if the power capable of opposing the Soviet Union withdrew from the Continent.

Let me quote him again:

"It cannot be stressed too often that NATO's [North Atlantic Treaty Organization] real strength does not lie in the paper undertakings which underpin it; it lies—and will continue in any circumstances to lie—in the appreciation of the Western spiritual and cultural community. If this appreciation is there, NATO will not be weaker as a political reality, because it may be supplemented or replaced by other arrangements so far as Germany is concerned."

There are many things one might say about this. One is that the "other arrangements so far as Germany is concerned" would leave the military protection of Europe to massive nuclear retaliation, which is just where Mr. Kennan and all the rest of us do not want it to be. A second is that it indefinitely delays the day when nuclear weapons of all sorts might be canceled out and the guarantee of European security placed on Allied conventional forces. But perhaps the most pertinent statement for our present purpose is that so long as we are giving personal assurances, I think I can give mine that Mr. Kennan's opinion is not shared by any responsible leader in the Democratic Party in the United States.

George E. Kennan makes the point in an article that there is little hope for better relations hetween the United States and Red China. Then he adds:

. . . I have never shared and cannot now share in the savage enthusiasm manv Americans have worked up over the cause of keeping the Chinese Communists out of the United Nations. I fail to see the logic of this position or to understand the overriding importance people attach to the question. It is not my understanding that we ever objected on principle to the inclusion of Communist states in the United Nations

THIS ATTITUDE completely ignores the nature of the Korean war which was de-clared to be a United Nations police action and into which the Chinese Communists intervened with the object of defeating the United Nations forces. Eventually they put up a campaign to force themselves upon the United Natheir way into the United Nations. That cannot be other misses the point altogether than an kinmoral act which when he raises this question as precedent for dealing with a United Nations question by the use of force.

Since the Korean war, Red China has held a number of Americans as prisoners. Some were soldiers, some civilians, some missionaries. Negotiations for the release of these prisoners have been continuous for more than a year without satisfactory results. The Red Chinese are treating us contemptibly. It is impossible to deal with a nation that has no honor, no dignity, no truth. Until a new government, based on moral principles, comes into existence in. Peking, there is no reason why we should deal with what is there now. MR. Kennan says:

". . . And to scratch around now among Communist regimes to establish relative degrees of iniquity, entitling some to membership and others not, is an undertaking for which I personally have no stomach . . . "

BUT WE DO not need to scratch around for relative degrees of iniquity. The iniquity asserts itself and there are just some things that are intolerable in nations as they are in man. One of them is lying; another is arrogance. We know that Red China lied when her propagandists throughout the world spread the story of germ warfare. Some may shrug it off as a impaign to force them-clever press agent's stunt: It upon the United Na-was a lie, a deliberate, cold-Their attitude could blooded lie designed to pictions. Their attitude could not be translated otherwise ture the United States as a than an attempt to shoot barbarous, inhuman nation.

he did in this article in the Socialist magazine, The New Leader. The American people do not approve of Tito's dictatorship, or of Nasser's. Some Americans do not approve of Franco's monarchism. But in the case of Red China, the American attitude is not one of lack of approval; it is a matter of total rejection. That is why Congress has so often voted resolutions against the seating of Red China in the United Nations, threatening to withdraw the United States if Red China is admitted. There does not seem to be any flioral alternative.

Acheson commented he was compelled to critize Kennan for fear our Allies would feel Kennan's statements reflected official views of Democratic Party. Others advised during the investigation Kennan highly qualified for position of Ambassador. Kennan's background was mainly in the field of our relations with Soviet Union and study of Russian culture and history. WASHINGTON SUNDAY STAR NOVEMBER 3, 1963

On a memorandum dated November 5th from Mr. Callahan to the Director, entitled "The Congressional Record," Mr. Hoover asked for an article captioned as above which appeared in The Washington Star" on November 3rd. Undoubtedly, the Director has in mind the attached article by Bernard Gwertzman which deals with the views on our foreign policy expressed by George Frost Kennan, former U.S. Ambassador to Yugoslavia.

Gertzman quotes Kennan as saying his tour of duty in Yugoslavia had been impaired by the havor wreaked on U.S. foreign policy by congressional politics. He criticized the removal of Yugoslavia from a most-favored nation status "in the face of the most solemn and formal warnings and objections on my part, conveyed to congressional leaders on many occasions and in many ways." He felt Congress too often damaged our foreign policy by permitting domestic politics to rule instead of considering the national? good. According to Gwertzman, Kennan said Congress was not the only body hampering State Department policy as there was also interference from other governmental agencies. He allegedly singled out the Immigration Service and the FBI for special criticism in the matter of passports, visas and re-entry permits, saying personnel of these two agencies have acted in ways contrary to the policy of the State Department regarding Yugoslavia. Gwertzman has Kennan saying that "many of the people (in the Immigration Service and the FBI) were going on the assumption that Yugoslavia was a member of the Soviet bloc, a thesis contrary to our own observations and to the established analysis of the department."

There is a possibility that Gwertzman actually based his article on one by J. Robert Moskin which is in the current issue of Look Magazine. (Copy attached) In this one Kennan referred to the FBI only one time when he said that "our form of Government is not well suited to making decisions." He says the reason for this is that "power is too much fragmented in Washington, including the Congress, the Armed Forces, the FBI--all the people who decide our national actions." Many of Kennan's conclusions set out in the Gwertzman article appear in the Moskin piece. Senator J. William Fulbright had the Moskin article reprinted in the 11-5-63 issue of The Congressional Record

10 Poly ON Kennan has had a somewhat stormy career with the State Department since he has never been hesitant to do battle for his very strong convictions. He confidence the mocratic Secretary of State Dean Acheson's German policy and was fired by Republican Secretary of State John Foster Dulles for disagreeing with Dulles' talk of "liberating" Eastern Europe. Shortly after his appointment in 1952 as U.S. Ambassador to the Soviet Union, Kennan was declared persona non grata. This arose from the fact that upon his arrival in Berlin, Germany, en route from Moscow to the U.S. for consultation, he answered a a newspaperman about conditions in Moscow by publicly and unfavorably comparing his treatment by the Russians with his treatment by the Nazis while interned in Berlin. This so enraged the Russians that they demanded his immediate recall. Kennan retired in 1953 and, until his appointment to the post in Yugoslavia in 1961, he was connected with the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, New Jersey.

Some of the controversial positions he has taken during his long foreign service career include the famous 1947 "containment" policy of preventing further Soviet expansion, approval for the admission of Red China into the United Nations and his advocacy of the withdrawal of all Allied troops from Europe. His current recommendation for the solution of what he terms the "failures" in America's foreign policy cannot help but arouse additional controversy. Kennan wants to raise the Secretary of State's Office to something "in the nature of a prime minister," giving external problems of the U.S. precedence over the internal ones so that "foreign policy should not be permitted to become a function of domestic-political convenience."

In 1947 Charles E. Bohlen, then Counselor for the State Department, said he never felt Kennan's "containment" policy was anything more than a description of the U.S. foreign policy as he had known it since the end of World War II. When Kennan said we should not try to obstruct the admission of Red China into the United Nations, in 1956, the Director expressed amazement that Kennan had apparently fallen for the Soviet line.

Kennan testified in the J. Robert Oppenheimer hearings that Oppenheimer intelligently helped him in Kennan's advisory position to the Secretary of State and that Oppenheimer had a great mind. Kennan also opposed supplying the North Atlantic Treaty Organization with missiles. During the FBI investigation of Kennan for his position as Ambassador to Yugoslavia, three individuals advised they considered his policies toward the Soviet Union as "too soft;" however, he received the unqualified endorsement of Dean Acheson, Charles Bohlen and W. Averell Harriman for the position.

Kennan has maintained cordial relations with the Bureau in the past and furnished helpful and pertinent material while he was with the State Department.

With respect to your inquiry, it is contrary to my longstanding policy to comment on material not prepared by personnel of this Bureau. Further, the FBI does not issue clearances or nonclearances of any type. Therefore, I am certain you will understand why I cannot comment as you have suggested. You may be assured, however, that the data contained in my book, 'Masters of Deceit,' is just as valid today as when it was written. In connection with these issues, perhaps you may wish to read my latest book, "A Study of Communism," which is a comprehensive study of the development and expansion of communism throughout the world. A copy may be available at your local library. Enclosed is some literature it is hoped will be of interest to you. Sincerely yours. NOTE: Correspondent is not identifiable in Bufiles. His enclosure pertains to former Ambassador Kennan's article, "The Right Way to Counter Communism." This is a treatise on the subject of "anticommunism" pointing out that it is a fallacy in current times to label every form of government that is opposed to our form of government as communist, and that we should broaden our vision and label these other ideologies in their true sense, and points out that whoever "tries to make anti-communism into a political or ethical philosophy is addressing himself to the past, and points out that other problems of the world such as nuclear science, overpopulation, etc., are problems to be considered and cannot be answered by 'anti-communism.'" Correspondent enclosed a copy of Kennan's article and drew attention to Kennan's remark that the American Communist Party has been reduced to a negligible state. This point is diametrically opposed to the FBI's position concerning the threat and menace of communism in the United States. For this reason it is felt that Kennan's article should be refuted as has been proposed by the above reply.

Dear Sir:

I will appreciate your advising whether or not there is any justification for one to be concerned about the inclosed article, "The Right Way to Counter Communism", which was published in the Presbyterian Life magazine dated July 15, 1965.

The article in my opinion is quite contradictory to articles in the American Legion publication of the "Firing Line", and also your book entitled "Masters of Deceit".

Is your office at liberty to state whether or not the author has complete security clearance? Thank you.

Counter Communism

by George F. Kennan

SUPPOSE it's only fair that I should be asked to lead a discussion of "the ethics of anti-communism." The last thirty-seven years of my life-have been preoccupied mostly, in one way or another, with the problem of international communism. And it seems to me that I have stood pretty much in the center of the brickbats that fly back and forth in this connection. I have a respectable collection of abusive and sometimes unprintable letters from people who think that I haven't been anti-communist enough. On the other hand, I am one of the few Americans who have had the distinction of being thrown out of Stalin's Russia on charges of being too anti-Soviet. And I can remember a certain week, in 1950, when the walls of Rio de Janeiro were decorated with hundreds of great tar inscriptions saying: "To death with Kennan." These were inscriptions put there by the local communists. I was buried repeatedly in effigy at that time, incidentally, by Brazilian communist students, who did me the moving courtesy of putting a white cross on the little black coffin they used for this purpose.

Nobody can be blamed for being exercised about international communism. There has been plenty to be exercised about. I think a healthy capacity for moral indignation is essential to understanding what communism is all about. In our Embassy in Moscow, when we got a new young officer assigned to us who had been trained in the Russian language, if, on first confrontation with the Soviet newspapers in the morning, he didn't rise from his desk and go storming around the office saying, "Look what these so-and-so's have said today!"—if he didn't do this, he was no good to us. It was a case where you had first to be capable of getting angry in order to understand what was up; and then you had to learn to control your anger.

The Soviet leaders obviously do not wish us well. Their ideology forbids them to do so. If they had their way, little would remain, I am sure, of our world position or of the things we value here at home.

But despite all this, I must say that I find the term "anti-communism" a very misleading one.

First of all, if you are going to talk, today, about anti-communism, you have to begin by answering the question: anti-whose-communism? Karl Marx's, or Lenin's, or Stalin's, or Mao's, or Gomulka's, or even Tito's, since he himself insists on using the term? These are by no means identical. Not even the communists themselves pretend any longer that they are. If all you say is that you are "against communism," you haven't made yourself very clear. You cannot simply say, "I am against them all," because in some respects the various outlooks that go by the name of communism are not just different but are actually in conflict with each other, so that you can't be against one of them in all its aspects without being, by implication, in favor of another one in those same aspects.

Suppose, then, you pick a certain communist country—let us say the Soviet Union—and say, "When I talk about anti-communism, it is this country I mean and it is the communism of this country I am against." But there are two things you could have in mind when you express yourself in this way: One, the present reality of the Soviet system with its internal institutions and practices; the way the regime treats its own citizens, and so on. Or, two, its external behavior: things it does on the world scene which affect adversely our interests and those of world peace, and which strike us as unjust or deceitful or aggressive.

Now these two things are not the same. We may not like the internal practices and institutions of the Soviet system, but so long as they don't have external effects that damage our interest, they are not really our business. Unless we have such dreams of grandeur that we picture ourselves as fit to rule the world, which I think very few of us do, then the golden rule is obviously going to apply here: We must agree to let Russians be Russians, and not try to substitute our conscience for theirs.

Perhaps you simply like to use the term "anticommunism" to record your abhorrence of the theory and practice of government which you understand to prevail in Russia. You can't mean, surely, that you are against all the institutions and practices of the Soviet system. There are a great many things that take place under the authority of, and in the name of, that system that are not all reprehensible: Schools are taught, people heal the sick, scientists pursue the quest for knowledge. Perhaps these things serve communism to some degree; the regime has often tried to make them do so. But this is not all they serve. Teachers teach, as they do here, because this is their pride and their profession and they feel it important that young people should be taught. Doctors heal for similar reasons. And scientists pursue their research because, like scientists everywhere, they have learned the nobility and the excitement of the quest for knowledge.

Obviously, it is not all features of communism that we are against—only certain ones But the swort term "anti-communism" does not suggest this.

And if we take just those things that we do definitely dislike in a communist system—such things as governmental hypocrisy, denial of civil liberties, the deliberate use of the big lie, automatic abuse and denigration of fallen statesmen—then we have to recognize that it is not in communist countries alone that such things are to be found; nor are they made any worse, just because they go under the banner of communism. Yet this, too, the term "anti-communism" does not suggest. It is, in fact, definitely misleading in this case; because it seems to carry the implication that we think these evils are confined to a single political system in a single part of the world, and that all other civilizations are wholly immune to them.

But suppose we turn for a moment to that aspect of international communism about which we do have a right to protest: to the behavior of communist regimes as actors on the world scene. Here again, we come up against great variations among communist governments. We have our problems with the Yugoslav government, but I am here to testify, after just spending two and a half years in that country, that the way it conducts itself in international affairs is as different from the conduct of the Chinese Communists, or of Yugoslavia's Albanian neighbors, as night is from day. The attitudes taken towards us by such diverse regimes as say the Soviet one, the Cuban, the Chinese, the Hungarian, and the Polish represent quite different problems for U.S. policy. To try to sum up our response to all of them by saying that our policy is one of "anticommunism" is simply not meaningful.

I can think of certain non-communist governments whose behavior towards us and towards the international community generally in recent years has been by no means superior to that of certain communist governments I could name. Do we really wish, by using the term "anti-communist," to obscure all this; to leave the implication that falsehood, malice, cantankerousness, irresponsibility, territorial expansionism, and aggressive behavior either do not exist in the behavior of non-communist states or are reprehensible only when they go by the name of communism? If not, why use the term "anti-communist"? Why not be specific? Why not oppose these phenomena, as such, wherever we encounter them?

Now how about anti-communism as a term relating to political forces within our own national life?

Never strong in membership or even in voter support, the American Communist Party nevertheless gained considerable moral influence, especially in intellectual circles, during the 1930's. This was primarily a result of the shattering effect of economic crisis and the loss of confidence in established American values which that crisis occasioned. The communists were greatly aided by their ability to identify at that time with anti-fascist groups generally, particularly in the case of the Spanish Civil War. They capitalized extensively on the revulsion to fascism which swept over the liberal West.

With the development of the so-called cold war in the late 1940's, the strength and influence of the American Communist Party began to decline rapidly. Even at the time of the anti-communist hysteria in the early 1950's, it already was a very minor force in our society. Today it is a tiny and pathetic little band of people embracing, I suppose, not much more than five thousand members, if that, or something less than one hundredth part of one per cent of our adult population. It is no exaggeration to say that the influence of the American Communist Party today in our society is negligible. If you were to comb the country, you would have a hard time finding a less influential group.

I have had many occasions, in the past 40 years, to know and observe people who are communists. Some of them were indeed brutal, treacherous and dangerous people. But others were idealists: people acting out of the deepest bewilderment and despair and misguided courage and desire to find the right answer. I must confess to you that deeply as I have disagreed with these people, and profoundly as I have deplored the methods and tactics to which they were led to subscribe, there have been many instances where I have had more respect for them, in all their error and all their hopelessness, than for many pillars of respectable American society, vegetating in the smugness and self-ishness and superficiality of their particular brand of philistinism.

To err, as we all know, is only human; and there is not one of us who does not do it with the greatest of regularity. To err with courage, with conviction, with self-sacrifice, and out of the agony of the soul, can at least be said to be tragic. But to err out of cowardice, of complacency, of jealousy, of vindictiveness or of greed, has not even this to be said for it; and I am not prepared to believe that error of this sort is any more acceptable in the sight of God just because it clothes itself in "anti-communism."

The Marxist-Leninist ideology was based on some serious misconceptions; and the methodology embraced by its adherents, under Lenin and Stalin, was in many respects evil and inexcusable. But no movement of our time, I am sorry to say, has more to show in the way of dedication, hard work, and selflessness, than does the movement that goes by the Leninist-Marxist name. We should not forget this; and when it comes to the American Communist Party, in particular, we should not be too self-righteous in our condemnation of men who have been made what they are by the stamp of circumstances—and circumstances, in many instances, for which every one of us in my generation, at least, bears a share of the blame.

Now there are many people who, when they use the term "anti-communism," have in mind not the little American Communist Party of this day but a whole variety of tendencies and conditions they associate with the word communism: tendencies and conditions supported by far wider circles than just the members of the Communist Party: such things as the increase in the powers of the central government, the high degree of paternalism which seems to them to be reflected in the existing social-security arrangements and other programs of social benefit, an inadequate degree of military aggressiveness in foreign policy, absence of demonstrative patriotic fervor, and so on. And to this I would just like to say that these are of course views you can hold: these tendencies and conditions do exist in our society, for better or for worse, and it is perfeetly all right for an American citizen to be against them, if this is the way he sees things. But what all this has to do with communism is not apparent.

(Continued from page 7) in favor of these things to some degree, but no more so than millions of other people; and to suggest that all of these tendencies in our society-most of which, to the extent they have been realized at all, have been realized through the operation of our democratic processes, and largely by act of Congress-are simply the result of some refined and diabolic Communist intrigue, by means of which tens of thousands of influential citizens, government servants, and legislators are affected without knowing it, is not only to propagate a preposterous absurdity, but it is also to do a profound disservice to the national cause.

In individual psychology the sense of being the innocent victim of unseen conspiratorial forces is often the beginning of, and a symptom of, mental illness. In political life it is the beginning of totalitarianism, which is only a form of mass psychosis: the social equivalent of mental illness. So true is this, and so dangerous are the consequences of yielding to this sort of escapism, that one ought to reject such suggestions even when the available evidence might seem to support them. I cannot warn too strongly those of you who are students against associating yourselves, ever, with the suggestion that your personal troubles or those of the society to which you belong are attributable only to dimly-sensed conspiratorial forces, wholly external to yourselves, beyond your power of comprehension or influence, whose hostility you have done nothing to deserve. To accept such suggestions is a sure path to irrationality, to illusion, and to disaster.

Evil is an omnipresent substance of human life: around us and within us as well as without us. In a way, it is all of a piece, just as love and truth are all of a piece. When we struggle against it we must always regard that struggle as in part an overcoming of self. We cannot for this reason identify ourselves self-righteously with all that is good and clothe whatever opposes us in the colors of unmitigated evil. But this we tend to do when we try to make out of an impermanent semantic symbol, such as "anti-communism," the expression of a personal and political philosophy.

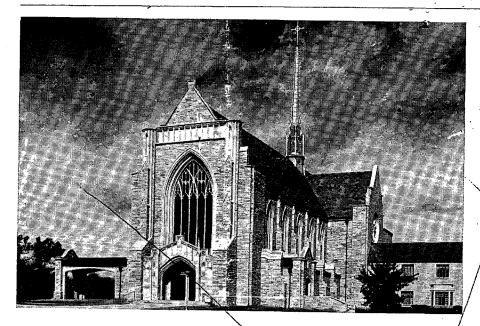

We all have in mind the events that have taken place in Moscow in the recent past. They have constituted in effect a third great crisis in the transfer of personal power from one set of hands to another in the history of a regime which has no adequate constitutional means of achieving such a transition. I have naturally had to think about this, and I have talked with friends, who, like myself have spent many years in the study of Russian communism. All of us, I think, have the impression that this recent series of events really marks the end of an epoch. It marks the final fading, as a political reality, of that aura of excitement and inspiration and authority which Moscow was able to radiate in the wake of the Russian Revolution of 1917, over restless, discontented elements in the western

Russia remains today a great power, as she was before 1917. She remains a problem to us as she would have been before 1917 had we then been an active participant in world affairs. But the importance of Moscow as a source of inspiration and authority for the communist parties of the West, and even for the communist parties now in power in Eastern Europe, has been extensively and probably decisively shattered.

Whoever, then, tries to make anticommunism into a political or ethical philosophy is addressing himself to the past. He is talking about things that were, not things that are. This is, as we all know, an unbelievably endangered world in which we live. The ultimate problems created by nuclear science and by overpopulation-by man's new-found ability to destroy his habitat entirely or to make it intolerable by multiplying himself within it beyond the point of endurance-stare us in the face. To neither of these problems does mere anti-communism even suggest an answer; and the morbid preoccupation with this term can scarcely be explained otherwise than as the reflection either of an inability to free one's self from the anxieties, the seizures, or the nightmares of the past, or a lack of the requisite manliness to face the reality of the present, I think it is high time that we, all of us, threw off these shackles, emancipated ourselves from the power of vague semantic symbols, and turned our faces resolutely, with all the realism and the honesty we can muster, to the problems of the present and the future.

Gifts Make College Possible For Seventy-four Young People

In these pages a year ago there appeared an article, "Churches Asked to Help Send Needy Young Persons to College." Since a number of congregations and even a few individuals—fifty one, actually respended to the suggestion in that article and a similar one in Monday Morning, we think it appropriate to give a report of progress.

The fifty-one churches and other donors contributed a total of $6,708. These funds were added to the $10,000 appropriated by the Commission on Religion and Race and the $20,000 appropriated by the Board of Christian Education from its share of the denomination's General Mission money. The total assisted seventy-three Negroes and one American Indian with grants of $150 to $750 (average grant $496).

None of these young people, with perhaps two exceptions, even dreamed of college as a possibility when they were high-school sophomores. Even if they had, they would have been unable to qualify for college. What turned the trick was attendance at the Summer Study Skills Program of the Board of National Mission's Educational Counseling Service. Through that remarkable tutorial program of six weeks' duration, each had been fired with the possibility of a college education and given the skills and professional guidance to obtain admission to an accredited institution.

Not one had failed or dropped out at the end of the first semester. The second semester's results are not in at this writing. One or two are on quite shaky ground. Will they make it? We don't know yet. But one statistic gives us confidence. Of the 228 "graduates" of the Summer Study Skills Program who are now in college as freshman, sophomores, juniors, and seniors, only dropped out for family reasons, entrance into military service, or other reasons beyond their control. None was a dropout for academic reasons.

And what about 1965-66? Again, we have $30,000-$15,000 from the Commission on Religion and Race and $15,000 from the Board of Christian Education. The donor churches and others have promised $2,380 of the $34,575 needed to keep last year's students in college this year. We believe the balance needed will yet come in.

Church links missions to building program. When First Presbyterian Church of Oklahoma City decided to erect its new $800,000 sanctuary, they added $200,000 for aiding the building programs of mission enterprises in the U.S. and overseas. To date, pastor C. Ralston Smith reports the church has expended nearly $85,000 for the following: $8,000 for an isolation ward at the hospital in Dembi Dollo, Ethiopia;/$50,000 for building a library chapel at the theological seminary in Seoul, Korea; $12,500 toward a science-chapel building at Pikeville (Kentucky) College; $7,000 for an agricultural center at Boggs Academy, Keysville, Georgia; and $5,200 for physiotherapy and surgical equipment for Presbyterian Hospital, Taegu, Korea. More funds will be expended, says Dr. Smith, at pledges are fulfilled.

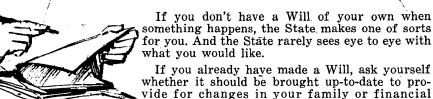

But with no new money, no new freshmen can be helped to enter college this fall. They keep applying just the same. At the moment, we have nine applicants whose needs total $13,827. Aid from the colleges will reduce the need in each case, but not enough to enable the student to enter without a

A bonus for those who work with the Opportunity Scholars is the letters of appreciation which are received. One student wrote: "Again I would like to thank you for all you have done for me. I am sure many fellows like myself need only one chance. I have really gained a lot from the experience of being a college student. I hope someday I will be able to do the things for younger boys and girls that you are doing for me."

The personnel file of Anthony Barrett (65-12906) maintained at the State Department, WDC, included a Department memorandum dated 12/8/37, setting forth the statement: "Kennan instinctively mistrusted Barrett". Kennan was identified as formerly attached to the Embassy at Moscow, Russia. Also included was a letter from Barrett, dated 6/28/38, addressed to George F. Kennan, advising that he was desirous of obtaining a position at San Jose, Costa Rica. (No further details.)

John Paul Milan Marsalka (100-41433), who had been employed at the American Embassy, Moscow, Russia during the period, 5/14/34-11/17/39, took the stand in his own behalf during 4/30-5/3/43 Civil Service Commission (CSC) hearings in WDC when he sought reinstatement as an economist in the Department of Agriculture. Marsalka named George Cannon of the Embassy Staff as one of his associates in Moscow.

On 6/5/55, H. Francis Junningham, Jr., Foreign Service Officer, USDS, was interviewed at the Army War College, Ft. Lesley J. McNair, WDC. Cunningham advised that around July 1941, Andre Gellert (65-62842), Vice Consul, US Embassy, Berlin, Germany, told him that he had some important information which he wanted to turn over to the US authorities at the Embassy. Accordingly, Cunningham made arrangements for Gellert to have lunch with George F. Kennan, Head of the Political Section of the Embassy. On this occasion Gellert advised Kennan of Japan's intentions of going to war against the US.

This reference is a Bermuda Censorship (62-63146) report on the Eastbound "Atlantic Clipper" which arrived on 9/12/42 and departed the same day. This report indicated that George Frost Kennan of the USA, accompanied by his wife, was proceeding to Portugal as Counsellor to the US Legation, Lisbon.

Bureau memo dated 7/10/43 carried as enclosures documents relating to Clayton E. Booker (100-207486), former clerk in the Office of the Military Attache, Lisbon, Portugal who had been discharged for insubordination on 5/6/43. A Dispatch dated 6/6/43, from the American Minister in Lisbon to the US Secretary of State, set forth some of the principal facts of this matter and indicated that Mr. Kennan, Counselor of the Legation, had reported Booker's activities in the Fall of 1942, and in April, 1943 had asked the Military Attache to conduct an investigation.

An article prepared by Booker entitled, "A Study in Intrigue, Lisbon, 1941-1943", dated 6/2/43, in discussing activities at the American Legation in Lisbon, referred to Col. Solborg and Kennan both aiming for leadership in intelligence activities and to British influence over the American Legation and "close collaboration" of Kennan with Gladhill. (Further details.)

According to this memo, George Kennan, First Secretary and Counselor of the Legation in Portugal, had returned to Washington and had brought with him microfilm of the article, "A Study in Intrigue". According to Kennan, this article was extremely biased and facts therein grossly distorted. Kennan advised, however, that much of the information Booker claimed to have obtained from an informant in Mr.

Mrs. Russell Wilcox, 4732 North Cumberland Boulevard, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, during an interview on 7/21/43, advised that during the Summer of 1940, Helen Olga Maria Roe (100-20461), with her husband, visited the Wilcoxes at their summer home in Northern Wisconsin, at which time Mrs. Wilcox introduced Roe to George Cannon who was then Second Secretary in the American Embassy in Berlin and now was attached to the American Embassy in Lisbon. Mrs. Wilcox said she felt that since Cannon had spent much time in Berlin the two would have much in common.

On 11/13/47, Umberto Caradossi (65-31872) contacted the Philadelphia Office, advising that he was concerned because an investigation was being conducted by the Bureau relative to his activities. Caradossi pointed out that he had not been in sympathy with Mussolini and the Fascist Movement in Italy. He said he had expressed his feelings in this connection in correspondence which he had directed to Stephen Early, Secretary to the late President Roosevelt. The first of these letters had been written about November, 1942 and thereafter at intervals until March, 1944. Caradossi advised that these letters had been forwarded to the American Legation in Lisbon. Caradossi advised that he had spoken to George Cannon, Charge d' Affaires, Lisbon, Portugal, who was familiar with his activities and Cannon had put him in touch with Dennis A. Flinn, legal attache, American Legation in Lisbon.

Correlator's Note: Further review of the aforementioned file disclosed that prior to the Italian Armistice on 9/8/43, Cardossi asked for and received an interview with George Frost Kennan, then Charge d' Affaires of the American Legation at Lisbon, Portugal, at which time he offered his services to the US. (See 65-31872-32 p.2)

The book "Behind The Iron Curtain" by George Moorad (100-348137), published by Fireside Press, Inc. in 1946, carried an article captioned "Coup d' Etat in Bucharest". This article revealed that on 9/12/44 in Moscow, an armistice agreement was signed between the governments of the United States of America, the Soviet Union, and the United Kingdom on the one hand, and the government of Rumania on the other. George Kennan, Charge d' Affaires, signed for the US.

The State Department advised that in a letter dated 4/14/45 from George F. Kennan, Moscow, to R. B. Macatee, Assistant Chief, Division of Foreign Service Personnel, Kennan discussed Waldo Ruess, who had been employed at the American Embassy in Moscow since early June 1944. In this letter Kennan advised that Ruess' work had been satisfactory, although his attitude was not what it could be; also that Ruess had an exaggerated idea of his own importance and was not popular with other members of the staff.

The NY Office furnished information regarding Eugeni Semenovitch Kirpichnikov who entered the US on 6/13/45 at Brooklyn, NY aboard the S.S. Mahanoy City Victory. He carried an identification letter dated 4/20/45 signed by George F. Kennan, American Embassy, Moscow, to the Chief Customs Officer, stating that Kirpichnikov was a diplomatic courier of the Soviet Embassy. Kennan also identified Kirpichnikov's wife and infant daughter.

USDS furnished a letter from George F. Kennan, Charge d'Affaires ad interim, Moscow, dated 5/7/45 and directed to that Department, regarding foreign representatives in the Soviet Union. With this letter Kennan submitted a "Partial List of Foreign Representatives in U.S.S.R.", and a list of "Foreign Representatives in Moscow, April 1, 1945" on which Kennan was listed as Minister-Counselor.

In a letter dated 7/17/45, to INS, WDC, Mrs. Celia M. Plicht, who had been employed at the American Embassy, Berlin, Germany from November 1940 to December 1941, set forth details of her husband's efforts to enter the US. Following their marriage in Germany on 11/4/41, Feliks A. Plicht was interned along with the Embassy staff and was not permitted to accompany Mrs. Plicht's group to the US (date not indicated). Mrs. Plicht's letter stated that Leland B. Morris, US Charge de Affaires, and George Kenan, First Secretary of the Embassy, appealed to the State Department through the Swiss, and the State Department agreed to exchange a German internee for Plicht. Although the German Foreign Office agreed to this exchange, they did not allow Plicht to depart with the group. (Files of INS.)

Correlator's Note: In mid-1949, F. A. Plichta was an employee of the C. Hartwig, Inc., 30 Pine Street, NYC. (See 100-360059-8.)

The Liaison Office, Ottawa, Canada, forwarded a letter dated 8/3/45, which had been directed to the Canadian Government by a representative at the Canadian Embassy in Moscow. This letter set forth information relating to communism, secured through conversations with representatives of the US Embassy in Moscow. George Kennon, US Charge d'Affaires there, was in possession of definite information showing that the Communist International was not liquidated in 1943, but was decentralized geographically. Kennon also possessed information that headquarters had been created in Paris to control the Communist Parties in Western Europe and that Latin American Parties were controlled from two centers in Mexico and Cuba. Eastern European Parties were controlled from Moscow. This letter indicated that advantages of this decentralization to the Soviet Government were appreciable.

USDS made available a paraphrase of a cable forwarded to USDS by the American Ambassador to Moscow on 1/10/46. The writer of this cable was George F. Kennon, Counselor of the Embassy, who stated that he had received certain material from Washington revealing an "imperfect understanding" of the problem concerning the Soviet attitude towards China. Kennon presented a survey of the problem as he viewed the situation from Moscow. (Details set out.)

Views expressed by Soviet Foreign Department officials in 1947 indicated that they had high respect for, and fear of the ability of certain US State Department (62-39749) personnel then formulating American foreign policy. Placed in this category was George F. Kennan, former Ambassador to Russia. These officials indicated that the Russians had gained respect for Kennan when he was credited by them for labelling the Soviet foreign policy as "Soviet imperialism". Another line of propaganda which the Soviets attributed to Kennan and indicated difficulty in counteracting, was the propaganda known as "containment". The Soviets found it difficult to interpret logically the "containment" policy as aggression in their propaganda.

The "Washington Star", 8/28/47, carried an article captioned "US Advises Europe Plan For Aid Must Be Reasonable, Realistic" subtitled "Lovett Also Warns Nations At Paris That Demands Must Diminish Next Year". This article indicated that the 16 nations drafting a blueprint for Europe's economic recovery had received official American advice that to win US acceptance the plan must be both reasonable and realistic. Two top State Department experts, George F. Kennan and Charles Bonesteel, were en route to Paris to advise Will L. Claton, Undersecretary of State for Economic Affairs, and Ambassador Jefferson Caffery that the US was ready to extend friendly aid at Paris. Other independent studies were being made by a governmental committee headed by Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, chairman of Truman's Council of Economic Advisers, and within the USDS by a policy group directed by Kennan.

A report of WFO set forth data from reports which Lieutenant General Izydor Rudolf Modelski (105-10830), Polish Military and Air Attache, WDC, transmitted to Poland in 1947 and 1948. This included letters to Brigadier General Waclaw Komar, Warsaw, dated 5/7/47 and 9/16/47, discussing American foreign policy and indicating that George F. Kennan, former Commissioner of the National War College, would direct the Political Planning Committee for the Department of State. This Committee was formed to try to solve the problems faced in the struggle against communism. This Committee would see that communist nations did not receive aid in material or financial form. advised General Komar that some of the top figures in the State Department like Kennan, indicated that the course of American foreign policy was directed against the Soviet Union and aimed at the reconstruction of a powerful German nation as far as the European theatre of diplomacy was concerned. According to the 5/7/47 letter, an article by W. H. Chamberlain in the "Wall Street Journal", 4/29/47, indicated that Kennan was the cousin of the well-known publisher, also named George Kennan, who, forty years ago, enlightened the world with his treatise on the political system of the Czarist Government. letter commented that Kennan was as fully informed on the conditions of the Soviet Union today as his cousin was forty years ago about Czarist Rule. (Letters set out.)

According to WFO, Modelski claimed that his reports were based on newspaper and magazine articles or were the products of his own interpretation of news events.

The "Daily Worker", 9/20/47, p.7, in an article captioned "The Dulles Conspiracy", stated that John Foster Dulles who was master-minding the "let's-have-war-with-Russia" program which so dangerously was dominating Washington's words and deeds, was reported by the "Philadelphia Bulletin" of Sept. 17 as having written Secretary Marshall's* recent speech which defied the spirit and the letter of the UN. The article accused Government leaders of warmongering and stated that Secretary Marshall appointed as his right-hand policy assistant, George Kennan, author of the vicious article preaching the impossibility of a settlement with Russia.

Bureau memo dated 2/2/50, enclosed translations from microfilm containing photographic negatives of subversive files of the French Service d' Ordre, as furnished by IDA* to the Bureau and Document No. 39 entitled "United States of America" included a document dated 11/1/47 captioned "The United States and the Soviet Regime". This set forth a detailed discussion of a report (title not indicated) by Georges F. Kennan, Director of Foreign Affairs of the State Department, which had been the object of the sharpest criticism by Walter Lippman, in a series of five articles in the "New York Herald Tribune" entitled "The Cold War". (Details set out.)

Document No. 39 also included a document dated 11/1/47 captioned "An American Document" which stated that Mr. Kennan, an American diplomat on a mission to Moscow who had accompanied USA President Roosevelt on various conferences, had been the principal artisan of the sudden change in President Roosevelt in considering a Russo-American difference of opinion inevitable in the post-war period. This document indicated that Kennan had been called to direct the new "Planing" Section of the State Department; that he currently was on a mission to Europe and just had made numerous contacts in Paris to prepare the application of the plan of assistance to Europe; and that Soviet newspapers of all countries had attacked him violently. According to this document, under the title: "The Origin of Soviet Conduct", Kennan tried to define "the political personality of Soviet power....product of ideology and circumstances". The letter indicated that ever since "Mr. X" tipped the hand of the government a year ago, on "influencing the Communist movement outside of Russia," as a part of the whole imperialist program, anyone with his eyes open could see a lot of developments that could fit into such a plan. It was noted that the Mr. X referred to in the aforementioned letter probably was Mr. Kennan of the State Department, who described publicly a year ago the policy of containment of Russia by resisting its efforts at encroachment and expansion at every turn.

The following references set out information on George F. Kennan developed in connection with a 3/11/48 request from the Department of Justice for information to be utilized by Department representatives handling the trial of Robert Henry Best (100-103780) in Boston, Massachusetts. Best, a journalist who was interned in Germany along with other American journalists and State Department officials following the outbreak of hostilities between the US and Germany in December 1941, had functioned as a radio commentator for the Germans. The Department specifically requested a copy of a memo in possession of the State Department, which had been prepared by 'George P. Kennan, now assistant to Secretary of State Marshall" which pertained to disclosures made to Kennan in Germany by Hugo Speck concerning Speck's contacts with German agents. In compliance with this request, the Bureau forwarded to Boston copies of reports obtained from the State Department, which were dated 3/15/42 through 5/11/42 at Bad Nauheim and 5/25 and 28/42 at sea, and signed George F. Kennan, or G. F. Kennan, or GFK. They set out information on members of the American Official Group interned at Bad Nauheim, Germany on whom there was some suspicion regarding their attitudes and loyalties, namely, Mrs. Tabor Divikey, Miss Mary Ann Kullmer, Hugo Templeton Speck, Charles Smith and Joe Weidhaas of the American group and Colombo Murray, representative of the Polish Relief Committee who had been attached to the group. These reports indicated that Kennan, First Secretary of the American Embassy in Berlin who was interned with the group at a hotel in Bad Nauheim from December 1941 until 5/12/42, functioned throughout as Liaison Officer in minor matters between the members of the American Official Group and the German officials. was ascertained at the State Department that Kennan currently was in Japan and was expected to return to WDC sometime before 3/28/48:

An Airgram dated 6/18/48, from Moscow to the Secretary of State, WDC, advised that the Soviet press recently had published articles emphasizing the willing cooperation of the Japanese Government in alleged US plans to convert Japan into a reactionary, anti-Communist bastion in the Far East. These articles concentrated on the Johnson Committee report and the activities of Mr. Johnson, General Draper, and Mr. George Kennan in an expected endeavor to characterize these gentlemen in Soviet eyes as prime examples of arch-imperialists (sic). One article made reference to a report from the Hong Kong newspaper "Huasanpao", which stated that Kennan had worked out the so-called "Little Marshall Plan" providing for economic and strategic ties between Japan, Southern Korea, the Philippines, and the former mandated islands that passed from Japan to the USA after the war; also, that as a result of negotiations between Kennan and Draper and the Japanese, a plan was evolved whereby Japan would be granted a loan in 1948-49. The "New Leader", New York, 3/19/49 p.2, carried an article captioned "Miss Bucar's Good-Bye" by David J. Dallin, pertaining to Anabella Bucar (65-53718), an American employee of the American Embassy in Moscow during 1946-48, who had married a Russian man and had become a useful member of the MGB family. According to this article, Bucar wrote a book, "Truth About American Diplomats", published recently in Moscow, in which she indicated that the American Embassy in Moscow was run by a bunch of crazy Soviet-haters, reactionaries of little political intelligence and low morals. She did not report much on the ambassadors themselves but directed most of her fury toward George Kennan (who spent a certain time in Moscow), Elbridge Durbrow and Frederick Reinhardt, accusing them of all possible crimes. The article stated further that these charges acquired certain importance, since their actual origin was the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Moscow.

The "New Leader", dated 7/16/49, carried an article captioned "Russia's Iron Hoop" by David J. Dallin. This article indicated that an editorial appeared in Pravda (61-2543) dealing with the results of the Paris Conference of Foreign Ministers. This editorial disagreed with Truman's statement that the conference and its decisions had proved the soundness of the American policy. As a commentary on the Truman Doctrine, George Kennan wrote an article for "Foreign Affairs". This article analyzed the "sources of Soviet conduct"; it broke with all appeasement policies; and it arrived at the conclusion that only firmness could contain Russia and perhaps make Stalin retreat. Kennan pointed out that inflated Soviet prestige was a major factor in international affairs and along with military power, was one of the iron hoops holding together the Soviet powder keg.

Swihart advised that Russell was largely the author of the Truman Doctrine, and also played a large role in getting across the concept of the Marshall Plan. He also stated that former Ambassador George Kennan once wrote an article on the general problem of the containment of Russia which appeared in "Foreign Affairs". He stated that the authorship of the article was revealed only as "X". Swihart stated that it was Russell's idea to get Kennan's article in print in this fashion so that his ideas on the matter could be circulated out in the open more readily.

This hearing was in connection with Wolfe's part in the pre-1919 Left-Wing revolutionary Socialist activities which resulted in the birth of the American CP. indicated that Wolfe had listed as a reference on his Form 57, George Kennan, former ambassador to Moscow and author of the Truman-Acheson "containment" policy. In connection with the possibility of Wolfe being a victim of the Reduction-in-Force underway in the USIA. Brown pointed out that it was possible that Kennan had sponsored Wolfe for a position with "VOICE" and that this tie-up might be the answer to the "pigeon-holing" of Brown's memoranda on Wolfe a year It also was indicative of the forces which might seek to keep Wolfe in the "VOICE" despite any derogatory revelations, and which might make an issue out of his possible firing from the "VOICE".

The serial indicated that Brown undoubtedly was identical with Eugene Vincent Brown, subject of Bufile 123-740, Special Inquiry - State Department (Voice of America). By memo dated 3/11/57, Bill Rusher of the SISS advised that reportedly about 60 men met on St. Simons Island, Georgia, in February 1957, to discuss world affairs. This was a meeting of the Bildersburg Society (62-103901) which seemed to have been started a few years previously by Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands and on a highly confidential basis. Several Americans including George Kennan were present, together with British Conservatives and Socialists, German Christian Democrats and Socialists, German and British industrialists, and representatives of the Benelux countries. Kennan suggested at one point (not known whether publicly or privately) that the US unilaterally should destroy its atomic stockpile as an "example" to the world, counting on world opinion to deter the Russians from using their own nuclear weapons. Opinion was divided equally among the German and British representatives, with the Socialists in each case agreeing with Kennan and Bowie. Assistant Secretary of State Robert Bowie argued that we should withdraw American forces from Europe and neutralize Germany. (Director's notation.)

George F. Kennan, IAS, Princeton, N.J., furnished a letter to the Bureau, written in the Russian language and dated 3/20/57, which he had received from Svetlana Kazembek, Connecticut College, New London, Connecticut, the wife of Alexander Lvovitch Kasem-beg (100-46986) who defected to Russia. According to Kennan, it was his impression from the contents of this letter that Mrs. Kazembek was a typical emotional Russian, impractical and warm hearted, and that she was innocent of what her husband had done.

The article indicated that Kennan and the Eisenhower Administration had not been on good terms and he was no longer with the USDS.
